

LIBRARY UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA
SAN DIEGO

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2007 with funding from Microsoft Corporation

THE TAILL OF RAUF COILYEAR

THE TAILL OF RAUF COILYEAR

A SCOTTISH METRICAL ROMANCE OF
THE FIFTEENTH CENTURY

EDITED, WITH INTRODUCTION, NOTES, AND GLOSSARIAL INDEX

BY

WILLIAM HAND BROWNE

PROFESSOR OF ENGLISH LITERATURE IN THE JOHNS HOPKINS UNIVERSITY

BALTIMORE
THE JOHNS HOPKINS PRESS

1903

JOHN MURPHY COMPANY, PRINTERS, BALTIMORE.

*Ga, lytill Buik, and gif ane freind thow meit,
May he ressaif the with benignitie,
Althocht, for suith, thy worth may nocht be greit,
Sa fer als I in the haif propertie.
I haif bot socht to keip in memorie
The taill ane nobill Makar, langayr deid, Wrait intill Inglis of the Northin Leid.*

do Introduction

INTRODUCTION.

A BRIEF OUTLINE OF EARLY SCOTTISH POETRY.

The extant poetical literature of Scotland dates no farther back than the fourteenth century. But we cannot doubt that much poetry of an earlier time has been lost, for we find in the most ancient work that has reached us a well-formed poetic style, correct, vigorous, and at times almost elegant versification, and a confidence and ease in handling the material that indicate a literature that has passed the tentative stage and arrived at a certain degree of maturity. We know from references in later writers, that many Scottish poets once wrote and were admired, of whom nought now remains but the names. But in this loss, while there may be much reason for regret, there is none for surprise. The foreign wars and intestine feuds and troubles which tormented and devastated Scotland, with but few intermissions, from the death of Alexander III. to that of Mary, and which destroyed so great a part of the ancient records and historical muniments of the kingdom, may well account for the disappearance of works preserved in manuscript copies by the very few who had at once the culture to care for literature, the leisure to enjoy it, and the means of procuring it.

The very oldest piece of Scottish poetry that has come down to us, is a song deploring the death of Alexander III. (1285), cited by Wyntoun (VII. ad fin.). It runs :

The Tail of Rauf Coilzear.

Quhen Alysandyr oure Kyng wes dede,
 That Scotland led in luwe and le,
 Away wes sons off ale and brede,
 Off wyne and wax, off gamyn and gle :
 Oure gold wes changyd in to lede.
 Cryst, borne in to Vyrghnyte, Succoure Scotland and remede,
 That stad [is in] perplexyte.

There seems no reason to doubt that these lines were originally written in the troubled period that followed Alexander's death. But it has apparently been modernised by Wyntoun, or some other, so that we cannot say that it is Scottish of the thirteenth century.

This northern school of poetry, so far as we are able to judge, continued the ancient Anglian traditions, underwent changes, and, like the southern school, reconstructed itself on French models. In the fifteenth century it was greatly influenced by the genius of Chaucer, and after the death of that poet, produced the most original and vigorous poetry that the island could boast, for about a hundred years.

Some writers divide extant Scottish Literature into Early and Middle, placing the dividing line about the middle of the fifteenth century ; but this distinction does not seem justified. It is quite true (as will be shown later) that the literary Scottish is a continuation of the ancient Northern or Northumbrian school of English, and, no doubt it went through stages of transformation, as did the English south of the Tweed. But of southern English we have an unbroken catena from the middle of the twelfth century ; and this tentative and transitional period, when the language was transforming itself from the English of Ælfric to the English of Chaucer, we call Early English. Nothing corresponding to this is extant in Scottish. The monuments of the transitional period have been lost; and the earliest texts show us a language and literary style already formed and settled. It will not do to assume lightly that during this period the Scottish and the Northumbrian south of the Tweed were identical. We do not know through what stadia of transformation the Early Scottish passed, nor shall we ever know, unless there should be a recovery of lost texts—which we can hardly hope.

For us, then, Scottish literature begins with Barbour, a contemporary of Chaucer.¹

JOHN BARBOUR was born in Aberdeenshire about 1320, six years after the victory of Bannockburn had secured the independence of Scotland. He entered the Church, and became Archdeacon of Aberdeen. Slight indications in the records show him to have been held in estimation by David II., and Robert II., and to have travelled in England and France. He died, it is believed, in 1395.

Barbour's great work, The Bruce, is a poetical narrative of the struggle of Scotland for independence. After a preamble telling of the death of Alexander III., and the disputed succession, the narrative proper begins about 1306, immediately after the death of Wallace, and comes down to the death of James of Douglas. Of course the work is occupied chiefly with the exploits of Robert Bruce and his brother Edward, James of Douglas, Walter the Stewart, and other heroes of that great struggle. It is the national epic of Scotland, and has the advantage over most epics—that of Wallace included—that it does not deal with fiction but with historic fact. Barbour lived so near the events that he narrates, that he had the opportunity, as he himself tells us, of obtaining his information from eye-witnesses and participants.

¹ It is almost superfluous to allude, even in a note, to the romance of Sir Tristrem, by some placed at the head of Scottish literature. The language is not, and could not have been, the Scottish of any period, being Midland with many Southern characteristics. Neither subject nor treatment is Scottish, and there is absolutely nothing in it to indicate a Scottish origin.

The Bruce is written in a clear, rapid, and vivid style, without rhetorical adornment, and occasionally glowing with true poetic fire. Though an ardent patriot, Barbour is no fanatical partisan, and can prize chivalry and magnanimity in an enemy, as witness his graceful and glowing tribute to the gallant Gilles de Argentine.

We have, unfortunately, no MS. of the Bruce earlier than 1487,¹ and as we know, by comparison with a large extract preserved by Wyntoun, that the later copyists have taken considerable liberties with the text, it is to be feared that it has suffered much detriment at the hands of scribes. Some have ascribed to Barbour another work, the Brut, giving the traditional genealogy of British kings from the Trojan Brutus, grandson of Aeneas; but no such work is known, and the ascription seems to have arisen from a misunderstanding of a passage in Wyntoun. Some have also attributed to him, on insufficient grounds, a collection of versified Legends of Saints, still extant.

ANDROW OF WYNTOUN, a canon regular of St. Andrews, and prior of St. Serf's Inch in Loch Leven, wrote, toward the close of the fourteenth and beginning of the fifteenth century, his Orygynale Cronykil of Scotland. Starting with the creation of the angels, he runs rapidly down the history of the world, until he reaches the traditional beginning of the Keltic monarchy of Scotland, and then pursues the dim and mythical legends of that country, and the clearer historic periods, to his own times. The work is very discursive and garrulous, showing neither artistic sense, nor critical discrimination between the possible and the impossible, the significant and the irrelevant. Anything pertaining to the time or the reign he is speaking of, whether recorded in the Bible or the Gesta Romanorum, is entitled to admission in his book. But the work has value as a repertory of anecdotes and traditions not found elsewhere. Here, for example, we have the first appearance of the three weird sisters—it is Wyntoun who calls them so—to Macbeth, who, however, sees them only in a dream, and they are not witches, but the three Fates of mythology.¹

¹ There are only two extant MSS.; the Cambridge MS., written by "J. de R. Capellanus" in 1487, and the Edinburgh MS. written by John Ramsay in 1489.

As Wyntoun does not mention the return of James I. from captivity in 1424, he is thought to have died not long before, in advanced age.

¹ As the passage has interest, it is subjoined :—

A nycht he thowcht, in hys dremyng,
 That syttand he was besyd the King
 At a sete in hwntyng, swa
 In till a leysh had grewhundys twa.
 He thowcht, quhile he was swa syttand,
 He sawe thre wemen by gangand,
 And thai wemen than thowcht he Thre werd Systrys mast lyk to be.
 The fyrst he hard say, gangand by,
 ‘Lo! yondyr the Thayne off Crwmbawchty!’
 The tothir woman sayd agayne, ‘Off Morave yhondyre I se the Thayne.’
 The thryd than sayd ‘I se the Kyng.’
 All this he herd in his dremyng :

About JAMES I., the royal poet, there hangs, of course, none of the obscurity that surrounds so many of the Scottish writers. He was born in 1394, the son of the unhappy Robert III., and the descendant, in the fourth generation, of Robert Bruce. The ambition of his unscrupulous uncle, the Duke of Albany, and the tragic and more than suspicious death of his elder brother, the Duke of Rothsay, caused the alarmed father to send the youthful James, then a boy of eleven, to France for security; but the vessel carrying him was captured by an English ship (not without suspicion of treachery on Albany's part) and the young prince was delivered a prisoner to Henry IV. At first his confinement seems to have been somewhat rigorous, but afterwards he was held rather as a friendly hostage than as a prisoner, and was instructed in all knightly arts and accomplishments. Acknowledged as a king on his father's death, he accompanied Henry V. as an ally in his campaign in France, and is said to have distinguished himself in the field. He had a taste for music and painting, and especially for literature, and was an enthusiastic student of the works of Gower and Chaucer, whom he calls his "Masters."

Sone efftyre that, in his yhowthad,
 Off thyr Thayndomys he Thayne was made;
 Syne neyst he thowcht to be Kyng,
 Fra Duncanys dayis had tane endyng.

Wyntoun, vi, 1850.

The first writer who mentions this meeting as an actual occurrence is Hector Boece, who wrote a hundred years after Wyntoun. Holinshed took the story from Boece, and Shakespeare from Holinshed. The idea that the three sisters, in their several announcements, tell Macbeth the past, the present, and the future, does not appear in Wyntoun, where all three relate to the future.

During his captivity he became enamoured of Lady Jane Beaufort, niece of Henry IV., an attachment we may suppose, highly satisfactory to Henry V., who saw in the match the opportunity of binding the young and warlike king to the house of Lancaster by firm ties of alliance; and—a rare thing in royal marriages—for once love and policy seem to have gone hand in hand. In 1424, James's ransom having been paid, he married Lady Jane, and the royal pair returned amid great rejoicings to Scotland, where James was crowned, like all Scottish kings, at Scone, near Perth.

He had learned much during his long residence in England, and especially the Lancastrian policy of centralisation and organisation, and of fortifying and augmenting the royal power by curbing the great barons and protecting the common people; and this policy he resolved to apply to Scotland, where the insolence, ambition and rapacity of the powerful nobles had been almost unchecked during the regency. But his reforms were too drastic, or at least too rapid, and James was too rashly courageous. A formidable conspiracy was organised against him, and in 1437 he was assassinated at Perth, with tragic circumstances and a tragic sequel familiar to all.

His great poem, the Kingis Quair, or King's Book, recites, partly in the guise of an allegory or vision, the story of his love—how he first saw his lady from the window of his prison, and fell into a passion which he could only suppose hopeless; and how in a vision he was borne aloft to the empyrean and to the court of Venus, where he saw lovers of all degrees and conditions, and received counsel and encouragement from the goddess, from Minerva and Fortune, afterwards confirmed by a message brought him by a dove. We must not take the royal lover too literally: he was in no sense a pining captive when he met Lady Jane, and had no obstacle to overcome, unless it were the coyness of the lady herself, which, we may presume, was not excessive.

The poem is written in Chaucer's favorite stanza of seven lines, or "rime royal," and closely imitates parts of Chaucer's Knichtes Tale and (in a less degree) his Hous of Fame. In other parts there is a striking resemblance to the Court of Love, a poem once ascribed to Chaucer, but which seems to be an expanded treatment of a theme found in the Temple of Glas, a poem usually attributed to Lydgate. The King dedicates his poem to his "masters," Gower and Chaucer, although no imitation of Gower is perceptible; a fact which suggests the possibility that James believed Gower to have been the author of the Temple of Glas.¹ James seems to have been the first to introduce Chaucer to Scotland, where his works exercised a great influence on the poets of the fifteenth century.

But the Kingis Quair is more than a mere imitation. Though thrown into an artificial form which had become almost canonical for poetry of high seriousness, it is instinct with genuine feeling and true poetic elevation; the descriptions are varied and bright, and the whole full of romantic grace, dignity, and tenderness. The language, while substantially Scottish, is greatly affected by Midland influences, and to some degree, assimilated to that of Chaucer.

A short moral poem called Good Counsel has been also (on rather slight evidence) assigned to James. Earlier critics ascribed to him the clever farcical poems, Christis Kirk on the ¹ As Gower was living when James was taken to England, and as his works must have been familiar at Court, this error—if error it be—is singular.

Grene, and Peblis to the Play, but this ascription can hardly now be seriously maintained.

If James I. is the first conscious artist whom we meet in the extant Scottish poetry, ROBERT HENRYSON is the first original artist. Of Henryson's personal history scarce anything is known. He is supposed to have been born about 1425, and to have been a schoolmaster in Dunfermline; and as he is styled "Master," it is inferred that he had taken an academic degree. In the list of members of Glasgow University in 1462, appears the name of "the Venerable Master Robert Henryson," who was probably the poet. That he died in Dunfermline we know from Dunbar.

Henryson, like other Scottish poets after James I., was strongly influenced by Chaucer, and even ventured, we may say, to enter the lists with him. Chaucer's treatment of the Troilus story seemed to him to lack completeness and a moral lesson: Cresseid should have been punished for her faithlessness and wantonness. So in his Testament of Cresseid he represents her as smitten with leprosy, a beggar and abhorred outcast, in which condition she is seen but not recognized by Troilus. Pierced by remorse and shame, she makes her testament of counsel and warning to her sex, and dies repentant.

Henryson's Orpheus and Eurydice, a singular allegorizing of the old fable, shows his classical and scholastic learning, while the pretty poem Robene and Makyne, which has been styled the earliest pastoral in the English language, has a charming simplicity. Most interesting, however, are his Fables, founded chiefly upon subjects taken from those collections which bore the name of Æsop, but treated with an ease, fluency, brightness, and certainty of literary touch not unworthy of Chaucer. Each of the fables is a little drama of natural dialogue, and his beasts are delightfully human. Henryson's other poems, chiefly of a moral and didactic character, show the same literary skill and mastery of versification under a more serious garb. It is thought that the fables were written about 1470 or 1480. Of his death we only know that it occurred before 1506, as Dunbar, in his Lament for the Makaris, written about that year, mentions him as having passed away.

Some time in the latter half of the century was written the curious moral fable or allegory of the Howlat. The author tells us that his name was HOLLAND, and that he lived in Moray; and some incline to identify him with one Sir Richard Holland, a priest and partisan of the house of Douglas, about whom almost nothing is known. The poem, which is in the same peculiar alliterative stanza as Rauf Coilzear, tells how the Owl, disgusted with his hideous form, went to the Peacock, the pope of the birds, to lodge a complaint against Nature as the author of his deformity. The Peacock assembles in œcumenical council the various dignitaries of the Church, and the secular powers,—birds of peace and birds of prey,—and the case is laid before them. In compliance with their joint petition Nature descends, and commands every bird to give the Howlat a feather, out of which she fashions him a gorgeous plumage, so that he surpasses all in splendour. But when thus exalted he became so insufferably arrogant and domineering that the birds beg to be relieved of him, and Nature obligingly reduces him to his former hideousness. A considerable part of the poem is taken up with a panegyric of the house of Douglas.

Contemporary with Henryson was HENRY THE MINSTREL

(often referred to as Blind Harry). Almost the only thing known about him is the statement given by John Maior (one of the teachers of Buchanan) who says that Henry was living "in the time of my infancy" (or between 1450 and 1460), that he was blind from his birth, and that he composed the Book of William Wallace, and travelled about the country reciting his poetry to knights and nobles, who provided him with the means of subsistence—"of which he was well worthy," Maior adds. Records show that gratuities were occasionally bestowed upon him from the royal treasury, the latest of these entries being in 1492.

Henry may have undertaken this poem to supplement the omission of Barbour, the plan of whose work did not include that period of the struggle in which Wallace was the chief figure; or it may have been that as a wandering minstrel he found that the exploits attributed to Wallace appealed more strongly to popular sentiment than those of Bruce. He says that he procured the material for his poem from a Latin history written by Master John Blair, Wallace's friend and chaplain, which is not impossible, though no such book is known to exist, nor is anything known of John Blair. If his statement be true, it is highly probable that he supplemented Blair's narrative with many floating traditions, some of which are historically impossible, and most are grossly exaggerated. In two hundred years a popular myth had grown up about the great champion, and Henry's Wallace is a very different personage from the steadfast magnanimous Wallace of history. Henry's Wallace is a kind of gigantic patriotic ogre, of superhuman strength and ferocity, mowing down troops with his single arm, mutilating prisoners, and ever thirsting for "the byrnand Sothroun blude;" and it is to be regretted that the popular estimate of one of the most heroic figures in history has been so largely derived from this distorted conception. But as an outburst of intense patriotism, and a recital of stirring adventures, the poem has much merit, and has enjoyed unbroken popularity from the time of its composition.

The authorship of this poem has been recently questioned on the grounds that a beggar, born blind, in Scotland in the fifteenth century could not have had that familiarity with the romancers and with Chaucer, which the Wallace shows, nor the knowledge of Latin which it implies. The poet's name is nowhere mentioned in the book, nor is there any allusion to his blindness. The question is still unsettled.

Nor was the chivalry romance unrepresented in Scottish literature. Poems or fragments of poems dealing with themes from the legends of Alexander and Arthur have been preserved; and Wyntoun expressly praises a poet of the name of Huchown (rather hastily assumed to have been a Scot) as the author of romances of Arthur and Gawayn, and of the Pistill of Susan (the story of Susanna and the Elders). A poem in alliterative verse bearing this title is still extant. Some ascribe to Huchown the Alliterative Morte Arthure, and some the Awntyrs of Arthure and the fine metrical romance usually known as Gawayne and the Green Knight; but the question is still unsettled. These poems, in the form in which we now have them, are not in the Scottish dialect, nor do they show any Scottish characteristics; and the great differences in style and poetic power are scarcely consistent with identical authorship. Dunbar also mentions a Clerk of Tranent, otherwise unknown, who wrote a Gawayn romance. Of the Charlemagne cycle the only poem discovered is that here reproduced; and it will be seen that the poet's treatment of his subject is free from the extravagant invention and fantastic style which characterise most of these singular productions.

We may complete this slight sketch of the most important poets of the Scottish literary period whose works are extant, by the names of Dunbar, Douglas, and Lyndsay, who bring us down to the Reformation.

By this time the language had differentiated itself into two registers. The scholarly poets, not content with showing their learning by an affluence of classical allusions, had begun to enrich their speech by a lavish introduction of Latinisms; and such "aureate" terms as "celicall," "redymyte," "sempiternie," "mellifluate," were thought to be the cachet of the scholar, and the proper vesture of lofty poesy. At the same time the vernacular speech of daily life was considered the fitting dress of light, satirical, or ludicrous pieces; and in the latter were introduced an amazing number of quaint, facetious, or vituperative terms, in which the popular speech showed a fecundity and pungency perhaps unexampled.

A master of both these forms, and perhaps the most versatile genius that Scotland has produced, was WILLIAM DUNBAR. This poet, the scion of an ancient and illustrious Scottish house, whose head was the Earl of March, was born about 1460. He was destined for the Church, and was educated at the University of St. Andrews, where he took the Bachelor's and Master's degrees. After this he entered the Franciscan order, and travelled extensively in England and France as a wandering preacher, but did not take the final vows, and afterwards discarded the habit. Returning to Scotland, he was attached to the court of James IV., whose marriage with Margaret Tudor he has celebrated in his allegorical poem, The Thrissill and The Rois.

Dunbar took priest's orders, and was exceedingly anxious to obtain a benefice; but this was never given him, while he saw, to his chagrin and indignation, unworthy persons exalted to high positions in the Church. James would not let him go, but testified his regard by gifts and pensions, not on a very liberal scale. After the death of James at Flodden we hear nothing further of Dunbar, and it is to be feared that he died in poverty and neglect.

Dunbar possessed a highly sensitive nature, which is reflected in his poems. At times he is gay, full of fun and almost boisterous merriment, and again plunged into the deepest melancholy, oppressed by the thoughts of approaching old age and inevitable death.

Setting aside the merely occasional pieces in which he throws into light but often graceful and ingenious verse some trifling incident or scandal of the court, Dunbar's poems may be divided into three classes, the allegorical, moral, and satirical.

His principal allegoric poem is The Golden Terge, in which he represents himself as brought before the court of Cupid, where lovely ladies bend their bows at him, but Reason, with a golden targe, or shield, screens him from their shafts. In the Thrissill and the Rois, which is, strictly speaking, figurative rather than allegorical, Nature is shown summoning all beasts, birds, and plants before her. She crowns the Lion king of beasts, the Eagle king of birds, and selecting the Scottish Thistle with his formidable bush of spears to be the monarch of plants, crowns him with "radiant rubies," and gives him the peerless "Rose of two colours" (the blood of York and of Lancaster mingling in Margaret Tudor) to be his queen. There is nothing in these two poems of the starch pedantry which is the weakness of allegory: they are full of life, melody, and beauty.

Dunbar's moral poems reflect the serious side of his character, and have an earnestness and sincerity which show that they sprang from real and deep feeling. In his satirical pieces, on the other hand, he gives a free rein to his wit and extraordinary and fantastic imagination. In his Fenzeit Freir of Tunland he commemorates with great glee the misadventure of one John Damian, an Italian friar and arch-quack, who pretending to be an adept in alchymy, had ingratiated himself with the King, who gave him the rich abbey of Tunland. Damian made himself a pair of wings and undertook to fly from the battlements of Stirling Castle to the coast of France, but fell and broke his leg. Dunbar sketches, in fantastic style, his earlier career of imposture, and then narrates his adventures in the air. The Dance of the Seven Deadly Sins, performed before Satan in Hell, has the weird grotesqueness of a nightmare. In his Flyting, or jocular scolding-match with his friend Walter Kennedy, the two poets illustrate the extraordinary richness of the vernacular tongue in grotesque scurrility, and their own ingenuity in metrical construction. His slighter occasional pieces have all the same light and easy touch, surprising facility in handling difficult metres, and an almost unerring skill in phrasing. The poems of his later years show a more serious colouring. In his Lament for the Makaris he enumerates poets of time past, and those of his own time who have departed this life, and concludes with the solemn reflection that his own day is rapidly nearing its close.

The range of Dunbar's genius must be still further extended if he be, as is generally supposed, the author of that admirable story in verse, The Freiris of Berwick. For vivacity, humour, neatness, and perfect literary skill, this poem will bear comparison with Chaucer's best work in the same style.

Of WALTER KENNEDY, Dunbar's antagonist in the Flyting previously mentioned, we know very little, though he had a high reputation in his day. He was a scion of the powerful western family of the Kennedies of Carrick, and from allusions in the poem, seems to have been a man of property. He is supposed to have been born about 1460. He was a Master of Arts of Glasgow University, and is highly spoken of by Dunbar, Douglas, and Lyndsay. He is mentioned as living by Douglas in 1501, and said by Dunbar in his Lament for the Makaris, written about 1506, to be then lying at the point of death. Beside his contributions to the Flyting, nothing from his pen remains but a few short poems of a moral and religious character.

GAWIN DOUGLAS was the third son of the great Archibald, Earl of Angus, called "Bell the Cat," and was born about 1475. He was destined for the Church, and took the Master's degree at St. Andrews. His high lineage opened a rapid road to promotion. He early showed distinguished ability as a poet, and wrote in 1501 his Palice of Honour, afterwards followed by Kyng Hart, and a translation from Ovid. In 1512 he began his translation of Vergil's Aeneid, which he finished only two months before the great disaster of Flodden. This battle, in which his two elder brothers fell on the field, drew the poet from his studies and plunged him into the whirlpool of political affairs.

The widowed queen Margaret, who had her brother's temperament, soon cast eyes of affection on the young Earl of Angus, the poet's nephew, and married him before the year was over. Gawin became now a power in the State, was entrusted with the Great Seal of the kingdom, and saw a brilliant career opening before him. At the same time he was nominated by the queen to the archbishopric of St. Andrews, the primacy of Scotland ; but there were other claimants who maintained their cause by force of arms, and Douglas, after an energetic contest, had to yield. In partial compensation he was made Bishop of Dunkeld ; but here also he met with opposition, and even suffered imprisonment before he could obtain possession of his bishopric.

The queen soon tired of her husband, Angus, and transferred her affections to the Regent, Albany, who deprived Douglas of his bishopric and other preferments. Douglas was then in London, whither he had gone in the hope of securing the support of Henry VIII. for Angus against Albany. In this he was unsuccessful, and to crown his misfortunes, Angus gave up the contest and submitted to the Regent. To return to Scotland was now impossible ; so the poet remained in London, solacing himself with the company of men of letters. Here he was stricken with the plague, and died in 1522.

The Palice of Honour and Kyng Hart are both allegorical works. The former is a panegyric of illustrious men of antiquity, and the latter an allegory or fable of human life. The former is rather overloaded with the display of classical reading ; and both, while showing undoubted talent and skill in the technique of versification, must be classed as academic compositions.

The version of the Æneid is by far Douglas's most important work. As the first metrical translation of the great Latin poet into English, it would have a title to respect ; but it is in itself an admirable production, being not only correct, but graphic, fluent, and spirited, and altogether a remarkable performance for the time. To each of the books he appended an original prologue of considerable length, which are perhaps the best of all his work. Especially the prologues to the seventh and twelfth books, one describing a Scottish winter, and the other a morning in May, have won the admiration of all critics for the truth, vividness, and beauty of the descriptions.

SIR DAVID LYNDSEY was born in Fife or East Lothian about 1490, and studied at St. Andrews. While yet young he was attached to the court as the special guardian and companion of the infant prince, afterwards James V., and James ever after regarded him with confidence and affection. During the regencies of Angus and Albany Lyndsay was removed from the court, and retiring to his estates devoted his time to recording, in a poem called the Dreme, his reflections on the leading men of the time and their misgovernment of the country. When James, by a bold stroke, seized the reins of government into his own hands, he recalled Lyndsay, whom he made a knight, and raised to the high dignity of Lyon King of Arms, or Chief Herald of Scotland.

In 1530, Lyndsay, who was now in a position to give open expression to his thoughts, wrote the Testament and Complaynt of the Papyngo. The King's favorite "papyngo" (popinjay or parrot) having accidentally received a mortal wound, sends her last messages and monitions to the King and leading personages. The poet boldly points out the abuses of the time, and does not even spare from his satire the clergy, their ambition, arrogance, and rapacity.

Lyndsay was also employed on several diplomatic missions, one of which was to arrange for the marriage of James with a French princess. The bride of James's choice was Madeleine, daughter of Francis I. But this fragile daughter of the Lily died after a few weeks of wedded life, and Lyndsay deplored her untimely fate in a tender elegy.

His next and most important work was Ane Satyre of the Thrie Estaitis, a dramatic poem or interlude performed at Linlithgow before the King and court at the feast of the Epiphany, 1539–40. It is of great length and took no less than nine hours for its representation, intervals being left at suitable points. This, the earliest specimen of the Scottish drama extant, is highly interesting from all points of view. The abuses of the time are clearly and vigorously set forth, and no classes are spared. Under "Rex Humanitas" James could easily recognize himself, and see his own frailties as in a mirror; and no doubt the public had no difficulty in detecting many others under the thin veil of allegory. The boldness and causticity with which he attacks the corruptions of the clergy, are surprising, and would probably have been ventured on by no man less strongly intrenched in the King's favour. Although he assails the abuses rather than the doctrines of the Church, we can feel the spirit of the Reformation just ready to burst forth. The drama is enlivened by various facetious episodes to amuse the spectators.

In 1546 the first crisis in the Reformation which had been secretly maturing in men's minds, occurred in the burning for heresy of George Wishart, promptly avenged by the assassination of the cruel and haughty Cardinal Beatoun. On this event Lyndsay wrote his Tragedie of the Cardinall, in which his sympathy with the Reforming party is obvious.

In 1550 Lyndsay wrote his Historie of Squyer Meldrum, reciting in verse the romantic adventures of a sort of knight-errant of his own time.

In 1553 he finished his last work, The Monarche, a long poem in the form of a dialogue between Experience and a Courtier, "on the miserable state of the world." As the title indicates, it is in a vein of moral and philosophical reflection. Other shorter pieces of a satirical character were also written at various times. Lyndsay died in April 1555.

Although Lyndsay never, so far as we can see, formally attached himself to the party of the Reformers, his bold censure and biting satire rendered great service to the Reformation, and he enjoyed a wide and lasting popularity.

THE TAILL OF RAUF COILYEAR.

The humorous metrical romance of Rauf Coilyear seems to have enjoyed a high popularity in Scotland about the beginning of the sixteenth century. Dunbar, complaining to James IV. (about 1500) that he is persistently neglected, while his sovereign's favours are lavished on people of no birth or merit, but pushing and self-assertive, says—

“Quhen servit is all uthir man,
Gentill and sempill off every clan,
Kyne of Rauf Coilyear, and Johnne the Reif, Na thing I get, nor conqueis can.” (To the King, 31-34)

So Gawin Douglas, in his Palice of Honour (1501) places Rauf Coilyear with other famous personages of romance and tradition whom the poet sees in the glass of Venus :

“I saw Raf Coilyear with his thrawin brow, Crabbit Johnne the Reif, and auld Cowkeywis sow.” (I, 65)

It is to be noted, however, that in neither of these passages is there direct reference to any particular poem or narrative; and Rauf Coilyear, like Robin Hood (also mentioned by Douglas) might have been the hero of various popular traditions. But in the Complaynt of Scotland (about 1549) there is a direct allusion to an extant poem or tale bearing this name. Among the tales that the shepherds tell, “some in prose and some in verse,” are mentioned, “the tayl of Syr

Euan, Arthours Knycht, Rauf Collzear Gauen and Gollogras Robene Hude and Lytil Johne."

But, though long deservedly popular, this romance seems to have fallen into neglect. No manuscript of it is extant. It was included, it is true, in the Asloan MS. (written about 1515) as appears from the table of contents, but the leaves containing it are lost. At the revival of interest in the early Scottish literature, toward the close of the eighteenth century, these references seem to have been all that was known of it.

In 1821 a single copy of the poem was discovered in the Advocates' Library in Edinburgh, and it still remains unique. It is a pamphlet of sixteen leaves, printed by Robert Lekpreuik at St. Andrews, in 1572, and bears the title :

"Heir beginnis the taill of Rauf Coilzear how he harbrait King Charlis," and ends with the colophon :

"Imprentit at Sanctandros be Robert Lekpreuik. Anno 1572."

As this is at present the only authority for the text, it is fortunate that it is remarkably free from errors.

Rauf Coilzear was included in Laing's Select Remains of Ancient Popular and Romance Poetry, published in 1822, and republished by John Small in 1885. It was edited by S. J. H. Herrtage for the Early English Text Society as Part VI. of the English Charlemagne Romances, issued in 1882. In 1892-97 it was included in a collection of Scottish Alliterative Poems, edited, with notes and glossary, by F. J. Amours, and published by the Scottish Text Society ; and in 1894 the text, with an introduction (in German) by Dr. M. Tonndorf appeared at Berlin.

This poem, which seems to be the solitary English metrical romance of the Charlemagne cycle, holds an intermediate place between the chivalry-romance and the humorous folk-tale. Like the former it is told with great gravity, and in a careful and elaborate versification; and like the latter it is simple, direct, and graphic in narration, and flavoured with a quiet humour which is unknown to the chivalry-romance.

As in others of these metrical romances, the story comprises two adventures, which have a more artistic connection than is usually the case. The story, in brief, is as follows:—

Two days before the great Yule festival, the Emperor, Charles the Great, returning to Paris with a retinue of nobles and knights from a pilgrimage to St. Thomas of Canterbury, is overtaken by a violent storm. The company are scattered, and the King finds himself alone in the mountains, ignorant of the way, and night rapidly drawing near. In this strait he fortunately falls in with a countryman leading a horse, who, though somewhat suspicious of the King, whom he does not know, consents to guide him to his own house in the mountains and there to lodge him for the night, and tells him that he is called Rauf Coilzear, or Ralph the charcoal-burner. Arriving at Rauf's house, the King finds not only warmth and shelter, but most hospitable, and indeed sumptuous entertainment from Rauf and his wife Gillian. But the collier, ignorant of his guest's rank, and punctilious on points of etiquette, undertakes to teach him good manners in rather violent fashion, to which the King very meekly submits.

In the morning Charles departs early, first offering payment for his entertainment, which brings him another rebuke from the collier for his utter ignorance of good breeding. The King then—who has already told Rauf that his name is Wymond, and that he is an officer of the court in the service of the queen—urges Rauf to come the next day to the court with his merchandise, and to be sure to ask for Wymond of the Wardrobe; and this the collier, after some persuasion, promises to do.

Returning to Paris, the King is met by Rolland and Oliver who with a great company, have been hunting for him all night; and he is escorted with much rejoicing to Paris. Mindful of his agreement with Rauf, on Yule morning Charles sends Sir Rolland to watch the ways, and to bring to him any man whom he may find travelling to the city before noon. Early the same morning, the collier, despite the warnings of his wife, who had a shrewd suspicion that Wymond was a more considerable person than he pretended, and feared that her husband might get into trouble—loads his horse with coal and takes the road to Paris. Emerging from the forest, Rauf is halted by Rolland, who bids him lay all other business aside and come at once to the King. The collier plumply refuses: he is going to the court to meet Wymond, but he will go at his own time and pleasure; and offers to fight Rolland then and there. Rolland counsels peace, and, after some debate, being convinced of Rauf's good faith, he lets him pass, but not until the two have agreed to meet at the same spot the next morning, to fight the quarrel out.

Rauf goes to the court, is stopped by the porter at the gate, but let in by Rolland's order, and pushes his way into the banqueting hall, where, to his alarm, he recognizes Wymond in the King. His apprehensions increase when Charles tells his adventure, and how he had been rebuked and buffeted by the collier. The lords cry out to hang Rauf; but the King says God forbid that such should be his gratitude to the man who saved his life: on the contrary, he shall be made a knight; which is done on the spot.

On the next morning Sir Rauf, in a gay suit of armour, sets out to keep his tryst with Rolland. At the appointed place he meets a knight on a camel, whom, supposing him to be his adversary, he attacks fiercely. They fight for some time, when Rolland himself appears and Rauf's unknown antagonist is discovered to be a Saracen, Magog by name, who is bringing the King a defiance from the Khan of Tartary. Magog offers to fight both the Christians at once, but is persuaded by Rolland to renounce his heathendom and become a Christian.

Upon this happy conclusion the three return to the King: Magog is baptized by the name of Gawteir, and wedded to the duchess Jane of Anjou, and Sir Rauf, for his prowess, is made Marshal of France. He afterwards, in memory of his good fortune, founds, at the place where he met the King, a free hostelry for all travelers.

The immediate source of the first adventure has not been pointed out, and it is probably the poet's own variation of an old theme. The adventures of a prince in disguise or unrecognized form the subject of many stories of English, continental, and oriental origin. The two tales in the Percy collection called The Miller of Mansfield, and John the Reeve, have the nearest resemblance to it. The incidents of the former are these:

King Henry, after a day's hunting in Sherwood forest, loses his way in the woods. While wandering about, he meets a miller of whom he asks help. The miller suspects him to be an outlawed thief, but is at last persuaded to take him to his own house, where he entertains him with his best, including venison stolen from the King's forest. The next morning the nobles, who have been seeking the King, find him at the miller's.

The miller is frightened on discovering the quality of his guest, but the King makes him a knight. In the second part the King sends for the miller and his son to come to the court at Westminster, where their rustic behaviour gives rise to much mirth.

As this poem, in the form in which we now have it, is evidently, as language and versification show, not earlier than the seventeenth century, it could not have been the origin of Rauf Coilzear.

John the Reeve, a much older poem, is associated, as we have seen, with Rauf Coilzear by both Dunbar and Douglas, and the two traditional heroes seem to have enjoyed a simultaneous popularity. The incidents are as follows :

King Edward I., accompanied by a bishop and an earl, while out hawking, loses his way. They fall in with a carl on horseback, who is with difficulty persuaded to give them assistance ; but at last takes them to his house, where they are welcomed by the carl's wife, and entertained first with poor fare, and afterwards sumptuously. On the King's return to Windsor he sends for John the Reeve (for so the carl was called) who comes, but is denied admission by the porter. The earl, however, spies him, and on his telling the King, John is admitted, and recognizes in the monarch his former guest. The King thanks him for his hospitality, makes him a knight, and assigns him a hundred pounds of yearly fee. On his return Sir John keeps ever after open house to all comers.

The incidents, it will be seen, are nearer to those in our text than those of the Miller of Mansfield. The measure is a simple six-line stanza in rime couée, slightly alliterated. The language (as we have it in the Percy MS.) is midland, and much later than that of Rauf Coilzear. If originally Scottish—which is unlikely, for a Scottish poet would hardly have represented Edward I. in a gracious light—it has been much changed by the scribes.

Several other ballads in the Percy collection and elsewhere treat of the meeting of a King, disguised or unrecognized, with a churl or peasant, and the rude behaviour of the latter, such as “King Edward and the Hermit,” “James I. and the Tinker,” “William III. and the Forester,” “King Edward and the Shepherd,” “Edward IV. and the Tanner of Tamworth.” Tonndorf also mentions, in German literature, Der hartgeschmiedete Landgraf, Landgraf Moritz von Hessen und der Soldat, Landgraf Philips und die Bauersfrau, Brot und Salz segnet Gott; all in the Deutsche Sagen of the Brothers Grimm. The tradition of Alfred in disguise in the herdsman’s cottage, and rebuked by the good woman, is but another variation of this antique theme; and one still more ancient is furnished by the returned Odysseus.

The second adventure has also nothing new. In Malory’s Morte Darthur, Sir Tristram overcomes the Saracen knight Sir Palomides, who volunteers to become a Christian; and in Ferumbras Oliver vanquishes and converts the heathen hero. The nearest resemblance is in the romance of Otuel (about 1330) where Roland fights the Saracen Otuel, and the issue of the combat is still in doubt when Roland urges his brave adversary to embrace Christianity, and promises him the King’s daughter Belecent in marriage, which offer Otuel accepts.

The literary skill of our author is shown by the natural and artistic manner in which he connects the two adventures. In these junctures the old romancers were apt to be clumsy, as for instance in the Awntyrs of Arthure.

The date of composition of the poem cannot be precisely determined. The language is that of the latter half of the fifteenth century. The passage from Dunbar already cited, if referring, as is probable, to this poem, shows it to have been popular as early as 1500. The German editor, Dr. Tonndorf, endeavours to fix the date by the following process of reasoning. In lines 930-936 occur the words :

“The gentill duches, Dame Jane, that clamis be her kin
 Angeos and vther landis, with mony riche toun
 In all France is nane sa fair
 Als scho is, appeirand air
 To twa douchereis.”

Tonndorf argues that as Anjou was erected into a duchy by John the Good in 1356, and reunited to the crown by Louis XI. in 1481, the time of composition must fall between these two dates, or shortly after the latter; and he inclines to date it 1484-5. But no heiress Jane (even had Anjou not been a male fief) is discoverable in the ducal line. The succession runs in the direct male line from Louis I., the first duke, to his grandson Louis III., who, having no male issue, left the duchy to his brother René, titular King of Naples. René dying in 1480 without a male heir, bequeathed Anjou to his younger brother, Charles VIII. of Maine, with the provision that in case of his death without male issue, it should pass to his nephew the King of France. This was actually the case: Charles died without heirs in 1481, and Louis XI. reunited the duchy to the crown, as was said before. All this Dr. Tonndorf admits; but he imagines that Jeanne de Laval, the childless widow of René, may have put in some claim on the death of Charles, even if nothing of the sort appears in the records. But Jeanne, far from being “heir apparent,” had not the shadow of a claim to the duchy; for if a female could have inherited, René's heir would have been his eldest daughter Yolande, Duchess of Lorraine and Bar, who survived her father. Far from protesting against René's bequest of Anjou, Jeanne made oath to his will. Tonndorf's conjecture is therefore altogether unsubstantial. The fact is that it is idle to seek historical data from a poet who makes Charlemagne go on a pilgrimage to the tomb of Thomas à Beket.

The place of production cannot be certainly determined. Dr. Tonndorf assigns it to the south of Scotland, and in this he may well be right; but his criteria are by no means decisive. These are, (1) the use of into for in; (2) the rarity of the use of till for to; (3) the careful distinction between the pres. part. in -and and the verbal noun in -ing. But all these criteria are found in the contemporary poet Holland, who wrote, as we know, in Moray in the far north.

No clew to the authorship is known to exist. From the slight infusion of the religious element so intrusively prominent in some of these romances, as for instance the Awntyrs, one might incline to think it the composition of a layman. The somewhat ludicrous picture of the thirty convents of priests in full canonicals marching behind Bishop Turpine, all "preichand of prophecie in processioun," seems rather to indicate the lay mind.

Tonndorf has taken much pains to prove, by a minute examination of language and versification, that the author of Rauf Coilzear was not the author of either Golagros and Gawane, the Awntyrs of Arthure, or the Pistill of Susan. It was almost a work of supererogation, as vocabulary, phrasing, and construction are conspicuously different. But even without this evidence, it is easy to see that they are not from the same hand. The author of Rauf Coilzear has an ease and directness, a mastery of his materials, and an artistic sense, beside which the others seem stiff and mechanical.

Whoever the author was, he was a man of no mean literary gifts. The narrative is vivid and dramatic, and told with ease, simplicity and fluency. He says all that is necessary for his effect, and no more, with neither the crowding tumultuousness of the alliterative Morte Arthure, nor the smooth and languid dilution of Clariodus. There are but few of those expletive phrases, "suthly to say," "in leid is nocht to layne," etc., with which the old romancers so often help out a halting line. The skilful construction of the story, and the simple gravity and good faith with which it is told, show the literary artist. Rauf himself is a character worthy of Scott, and far more real and lifelike than his Friar Tuck. In all the extant early Scottish poetry we find no piece of humorous narrative to equal it, except the Freiris of Berwick.

If we consider English literature as a whole, we might say that this poem belongs to that movement of reaction in which popular themes and natural character began to take the place of the pompous, sometimes stiff, and always rather unreal poetry of the court and cloister. When the iron rigidity of feudalism had begun to soften and take more gracious shape; when the ideal knight was no longer a ferocious wild beast, like William de Belesme or Thomas de Couci; where the ideal of chivalry arose, adding to courage, the soldier's virtue, honour, or a noble regard for one's self, and courtesy, or a noble regard for others—the canons of the new faith were recorded in the chivalry romances. Arthur and his knights of the Round Table, Charlemagne and his Paladins, and other legendary heroes, were depicted as ideal personages, of more than human strength, prowess, fortitude and magnanimity. In process of time men began to weary of these phantoms, and to desire something more natural and human. But in dealing with Scottish literature as a thing apart, we must modify this statement. Scottish literature, from Barbour down, had planted itself on the realities of life, and made few excursions into the realm of fantasy, except in the didactic allegory. But little, so far as we can see, was produced in Scotland corresponding to those fanciful chivalry romances such as the alliterative Morte Arthure, Gawayne, etc., whose home seems to have been in Cumberland or Lancashire.

For this difference we may assign two reasons. First, owing to the greater poverty of Scotland, chivalry was not surrounded with the pomp and fantastic magnificence that it assumed in England. Secondly, the sturdy practical character of the Lowland Scots was not favourable to dalliance in the enchanted lands of faery, with beings as unsubstantial as dreams.

Again, the chivalry romances usually treat knights and nobles as a class apart, actuated by motives and contemplating ideals which the churl cannot comprehend. "The cherle has doon a cherles dede," says the contemptuous lady in the Sompnoures Tale, implying that Thomas had behaved according to the ethics and decencies of his order, and was therefore not censurable. But such a distinction was unknown in Scotland. There was little or no distinctly aristocratic literature, such as were the chivalry romances. There was no proletariat. As a rule, every native Scot claimed kindred with some noble family or clan, and the claim was willingly allowed. Like the Catalau, every Johnstone or McDonald was "tan hidalgo como el rey, pero no tan rico." No insuperable barrier interposed to hinder the poorest Scot from rising to distinction through his merits or good fortune. Here Rauf, the hard-headed and hard-fisted collier, predominates over royalty and knighthood. He teaches Charlemagne a lesson in courtesy; does not yield an inch to Rolland, though he pays the due respect to his knightly rank; bears his honours of knighthood well and worshipfully, and by his chivalrous conduct, quite as much as by his strength of arm, worthily attains high dignity, which we may be sure he will never disgrace. The Miller of Mansfield is, and remains, a churl, for he was knighted in mockery: Rauf receives the order "for his courtasie."

While the first adventure is humorous, there is nothing ludicrous in the second. Rauf's combat with the Saracen is as serious, and his bearing as gallant as if he were Gawayn himself; and indeed had it been otherwise, the implied moral of the poem would have been lost—the moral that courage and courtesy, not rank or fortune, make the true knight.

For this reason the present editor thinks Brandl¹ in error when he treats the second adventure of the poem as a burlesque on the chivalry romances, as if it were another Sir Thopas (a burlesque of the form) or Turnament of Totenham (a burlesque of the substance). That critic's recollection of the poem, however, must have been confused, as he makes Rauf meet King Arthur at the Terne Wathelyne, instead of Charlemagne near Paris; and speaks of his "boxing with the porter," and outshining Rolland at court, of all which there is no word in the text.

¹ In Paul's Grundriss f. German. Philol., II. 714.

LANGUAGE.

The Lowland Scottish language, though now degenerated into a number of local patois, capable, it is true, of much tenderness and pathos when handled by a master, but still rude, and essentially the dialect of peasants—was once a noble and cultivated literary speech, fully equal in dignity, power, and grace to the language of the south, and with quite as good a right to call itself “English.” Indeed, we may say with a better right, for “English” meaning “the speech of the Angles,” the early Scottish was more thoroughly Anglian than the dialects spoken south of the Humber, and was universally and rightly called “Inglis” by its speakers and writers.

Though Scotland, at the beginnings of recorded history, was occupied by Keltic races, yet the powerful Anglian people, at an early date after the invasion of Britain, extended their sway over the southern border, and at the beginning of the seventh century were occupying Lothian, or the territory south of the Forth, near which river their King, Edwin of Northumbria, about 626, built the frontier stronghold Edinburgh, “Edwin’s town,” which perpetuates his name. Lothian was then an integral part of Northumbria, and its people were Angles, with a considerable infusion of Norsemen. The later history of Lothian is of special importance, not only because it was a piece of England annexed to Scotland, but because, in the course of time, it virtually and politically became Scotland. The story, in brief, is this:—

About the middle of the ninth century the Keltic peoples of Scotland were united under one monarch who called himself King of the Scots. About 970, Edgar, King of the English, ceded Lothian to the Scottish King Kenneth III. (and a grant to Kenneth's successor extended the boundary to the Tweed), under certain conditions, one of which was that the people should retain their Englishry—that is, their Anglian laws and language. So it was for some time a matter of dispute whether Lothian was an integral part of the Scottish kingdom, or a fief held under the English crown. William the Conqueror forced the Scottish King Malcolm Canmore to do homage for Lothian, and several of Malcolm's successors did the same, but reluctantly and under protest, until the war of independence, when the matter was settled by the treaty of Northampton in 1328.

Thus though Scotland proper remained politically a Keltic monarchy, preserving its original laws, customs, and speech, the Lowlands were recognized as an English land, and retained their English laws and language. About the latter part of the eleventh century the Angle-speech of Northumbria began to supersede the Gaelic as the speech of the court and the laws. The principal cause of this change was the transformation which the Scottish monarchy itself underwent. Malcolm Canmore, son of King Duncan by a Northumbrian lady, was half an Angle by birth, and more than half by predilection. While a fugitive from the power of Macbeth, who had seized the throne,¹ he had found an asylum at the court of Edward the Confessor (or, at all events, in England) where he saw an order, dignity, and refinement unknown in his own semi-barbarous kingdom, and a land governed by fixed and written laws, instead of tribal customs and the arbitrary pleasure of savage chiefs. He saw great nobles supporting the kingship instead of banding against it, a free parliament (the Witenagemot) taking thought for the welfare of all, and a people who recognized themselves as an organized nation. Immediately after the Conquest, Malcolm, who had regained his crown by the death of Macbeth in 1057, sheltered, and then married, Margaret, granddaughter of Edmund Ironside and sister of Edgar the Ætheling, the lineal heir to the English throne. The character and virtues of this princess were such as to lead to her canonization as a saint; and her influence over her husband and the whole people must have been great. At the same time great numbers of the English of the north fled from the severity of William over the border into Scotland, where they were welcomed by Malcolm and his queen. The royal family was now so identified with the Anglian population, that we are justified in calling Malcolm and his successors English princes; so that when England seemed about to become Norman, Scotland became English. As if to emphasize the fact, Malcolm's children were named Edward, Edmund, Ethelred, Edgar, Alexander, and David, and from the time of his son Edgar, but one King of the Scots bore a Gaelic name. As was natural, the Gaelic portion of the population grew to look upon their kings as aliens with little or no claim to their loyalty or affection, and the kings regarded their Gaelic subjects as turbulent malcontents. A quite remarkable contempt and abhorrence for the Gaels (or "Irish") as semi-savages of barbarous manners, uncouth appearance, and intolerable speech, grew up in the Lowlands, as the literature of more than three centuries abundantly witnesses.

¹ Some writers suppose that the rebellion of Macbeth, Maarmor, or Prince of Moray, was reactionary: a Pictish uprising against the Dalriadic dynasty, and against the Anglicising tendency of the South.

The speech of the Lowlands at this time was, no doubt, very similar to, if not identical with that of Northumbria.

The numbers of Norsemen who, from an early period, settled in Northumbria, Lothian, and on the east coast of Scotland, must have added many Scandinavian words to both divisions of the northern speech, with a marked influence upon the grammar and phonology. It is plain that the Northern dialects, in regard to the levelling of vowels, dropping inflections and consonants, etc., took (whether by imitation or some internal law of change) the path which the Scandinavian tongues took, and that much earlier than did the Southern dialects. But the loss of records and literary monuments leaves us in the dark as to what transformations the Scottish language underwent until late in the fourteenth century,¹ when we find a regular and polished literary Scottish, differing not very greatly from the contemporary Northumbrian. This was now the national language of Scotland, the language of the court and diplomacy, of the parliament, the laws, and the literature. Its resources were developed by poets and prose writers of genius, taste, and culture for about two hundred years.

But during this time it differentiated itself considerably from the English south of the Tweed, where the Midland

¹ No manuscript in the Lowland Scottish has been discovered earlier than 1385. We have the same difficulty with the Northumbrian dialect, where the loss of documents prevents us from bridging the space between the eleventh and fourteenth centuries as we can in the case of the Southern dialects. Forms that we now mark as distinctly Scottish, may once have been common to both regions of the Northern speech. The verses on the Ruthwell Cross in Dumfriesshire prove nothing, as they are a transcript from a Northumbrian poem.

General characteristics of the Northern dialect are: In the verb, -es in the pres. ind. pl.; omission of -en from the infinitive; no infinitives in -y or -ie; omission of the prefix y- or i-; -and as the ending of the pres. participle. In the noun, very few weak pls. in -en or -n; very few mutation-plurals.

dialect gained the upper hand of the Northern. The hostility to England which was chronic in Scotland long after the war of independence, brought the Scots into close alliance with France. Most educated Scottish youth went to France to study; many Scottish knights and soldiers spent years in the French service; there was a close friendship and constant intercommunication between the two peoples, and thus a multitude of French words, phrases, and constructions entered into the literary language, which became more and more separate from the vernacular or speech of daily life. The latter assimilated many words from the Scandinavian and Gaelic—to which some writers add Pictish, though I am not aware that a Pictish word has been identified.¹

Toward the time of the Reformation, or the middle of the sixteenth century, when Scotland broke off her ancient alliance with France, and allied herself with England, the literary speech of Scotland begins to assimilate itself to the southern English; and the accession of James VI. to the English throne, and the removal of the court to London, gave a mortal wound to the literary Scottish, which began to be looked upon as a rude and rustic dialect; this tendency being greatly assisted by the universal use of the Geneva, or the Authorized Version of the Bible. The vernacular speech, however, survived in the mouths of men, especially of the peasantry, and in songs, ballads, and humorous poetry; but having no standard, it split up into numerous dialects, and so survives to our own time, much affected by phonetic degradation.

¹ For the reason mentioned in the previous note, it is possible that we may exaggerate the Scandinavian influence in the earlier period. Forms and words that we consider Scandinavian may have been originally Anglian, and the borrowing may have been the other way.

VOCABULARY.

The words occurring in Rauf Coilzear may be divided into three classes :—

1. Those extant in modern southern English unchanged, as king, or with only the dialectic difference, as coillis.

2. Those which survive only in provincial or other special use, as fell (hill), myrk (dark), renk (lists, tilting-ground, whence “skating-rink”).

3. Those which have never existed or no longer exist in customary southern English. These are :—

I. Of Teutonic or Scandinavian origin :

airt, anent, baft, bane, beird, beirn, believe, bent, benwart, bet, bigging, birny, bland, blin, blonk, bodword, boun, braidit, braithlie, burelie, buskit, busteous, byrd, byre, cant, carll, carp, cleikit, coft, derf, ding, docht, dreichlie, drichtine, fand, fair, ferly, flan, foroutin, forrow, forzeild, foundis, frane, freik, freuch, gait, ganandest, gane, gar, gedlyng, gestning, girth, graid, graith, grassum, gyde, gyrd, haikit, hecht, hende, huif, hy, hynt, ilk, ithand, ken, kyith, lak, lane, leid, lemit, lent, lesing, liddernes, lyft, mer, neidlingis, onwart, pithis, quemly, raik, renkis, rid, rufe, ruse, schord, seigis, seir, selcouth, sib, speir, spreit, start, stound, sture, swyith, syne, teind, teir, tene, tent, tharth, thourtour, thra, thraly, thrawin, threip, thring, tit, tyne, tyte, vmbekest, vnkend, vnrufe, wane, wary-soun, wayndit, weir, wicht, will (astray), wy, wyning, wythest, zaip, zair, zeid, zeme.

II. Of Romance origin are,— aduertance, bancouris, bellisand, bene, cachit, capill, compeir, cornellis, cussanis, dosouris, dourly, duchepeiris, dule, durandlie, encheif, fewtir, fleichingis, fusioun, galzart, gentrise, mait, mat, myster, pane, pauyot, prest, pulanis, rais, renk (course), reuall, reuest, rew, ronsy, saill, senz3eorabill, souerance, sperpellit, stour, succuderus, wassalage.

VOWELS.

The vowels differ to some extent from those in use to the south of the Tweed. The most conspicuous differences are these:—

a takes the place of Mod. Eng. o (OE. ā) in words like hame (home) stane (stone). These words are also often written with ai, as raid (rode), laid (load).

ai also sometimes replaces Mod. Eng. e (OE. ǣ) as in quhair (where), thair (there).

ei replaces e in weill (well), heir (here); ea in zeir (year) deid (dead), greit (great); ee in kneillit (kneeled), deidis (deeds), creip (creep); i in geif (give), leif (live); o (OE. ō) in leis (lose).

o before a guttural often corresponds to Mod. Eng. ou, as bocht (bought) socht (sought), thocht (thought).

ow has the sound of ū (oo, ou).

ō (oi) had often the sound of u (oo) as is shown by such interchangeable forms as roiff, rufe; behovit, behufit; rois, ruse; as well as by the rimes. Whether this was a full u, as in Mod. Eng. do, move, or a narrow u, is uncertain.

u frequently replaces Mod. Eng. oo (OE. ō) as in gude, mure. It is also written ui, as in buik (book) suith (sooth), especially in the later texts. This narrow sound resembling French u, was probably due to Keltic influence; but the i may have been originally inserted to indicate a long vowel, as in ai, ei, oi, and yi.

y often corresponds to Mod. Eng. i, as fyre, pryde. It is sometimes written yi, as swyith, blyith, kyith, which is merely an indication of length.

A silent i is sometimes inserted to lengthen a preceding o (analogous to a, ai) as coillis (coals), befoir (before), rois (rose). The characters i and y, are constantly interchanged.

v (in our text) is always initial, whether it represent a vowel or consonant, as vndo, vacant. So u is always medial, as rufe, conuert.

The subjoined scheme, though imperfect, may be helpful to the student.

VOWELS.

(ORIGINALLY SHORT).

Nth. a, W. S. a before nasals is represented by a, as blan, name, gang, wan (won), and before other consonants by a or ai, as mak, taill, fair (go).

a + g becomes aw in dawis (days).

as in the pl. of strong nouns (ME. es) has become -is, as stanis.

Levelling has reduced other plurals to this form, as daillis, freikis.

Nth. a, W. S. o becomes u in durst.

Nth. a (or > ā), W. S. ea (breaking) is represented by a, as fall, hald, ald, arme;

or by au in auld, tauld (tald in the rime).
It becomes ei in weild.

Nth. æ, W. S. æ becomes a or ai, as bak, glaid (glad),

and e in efter, hes.

æ + g is represented by a or ay in agane, agayne, day.

Nth. æ, W. S. ǣ

becomes ei in leird (taught).

Nth. æ, W. S. a becomes a (with inorganic l) in walkin (waken).

Nth. æ (+ g) W. S. e (+ g) becomes ay in playis.

Nth. æ, W. S. ea becomes ai in gaif, and e in zet.

Nth. æ (+ h) W. S. ea (+ h) becomes aw in saw.

Nth. æ (+ h) W. S. i (+ h) becomes ich in knight.

Nth. æ, W. S. i (+ h) becomes ai in slais (W. S. slihð).

Nth. e, ē, W. S. e, ē remains for the most part unchanged, as bed, men, help, anent, tell, sell; but at the end of strong past participles it has become i, as chosin, haldin, knawin.

It becomes ei in speir (spear) weill, feild, meit (meat), and a in the second syllable of erand.

The unstressed (or feminine) final e makes no syllable.

Nth. e, W. S. æ, ie, i remains e or becomes ai in gest, gaist (guest).

Nth. e, W. S. eo remains e in fer,

and is represented by i (with metathesis) in bricht.

Nth. e (+ h), W. S. i (+ h) becomes i + ch in richt.

Nth. e (+ h), W. S. eo (+ h) becomes i + ch in licht.

becomes e + ch in fecht.

Nth. i, W. S. i remains usually unchanged, as thing, find, will, win, drink, sit, or becomes y as in chylde.

In leif (live) it has become ei, and e in mekle.

Nth. o, q, W. S. a becomes i in hing.

Nth. o, W. S. o, q

remains usually unchanged, as hors, God, word, ouir, on, mony; but becomes a in man, land, fra, stand, hand, and the first syl. of agane, anent.

Before r it sometimes becomes u or ui, as furth, buird.

Nth. o, W. S. eo remains o in sword, worthis (becomes), and becomes a in ward.

Nth. o, W. S. ēo remains o in wox.

Nth. u, W. S. u, (ū) remains mostly unchanged, as full, sum, lufe, burgh.

Before nd it is lengthened and becomes ou, as ground, stound, but o in wonder and some (son).

u + g becomes ou in foullis.

Nth. y, W. S. y is represented by i or y, as win, wyn (happiness, prosperity), becomes e in euill, and ei in speir (ask).

Nth. ea, W. S. æ has become i in togidder.

Nth. ea, W. S. e becomes ei in beir (bear), steill (steal).

Nth. ea, W. S. ea (breaking) becomes a in benwart, inwart, outward, hard, arme :

ei in eird (country),
and ai in zair.

Nth. ea, W. S. eo becomes a in hart.

Nth. ea (e), W. S. ie becomes ei in geif, and e in get, forget.

Nth. eo, W. S. e becomes e in self.

Nth. eo, W. S. ea becomes a in schame,

Nth. eo, W. S. eo becomes ei in eird (earth),and e in sewin.

Nth. eo, W. S. ēo becomes e in fell,and ei in zeid.

Nth. oe, W. S. e (ē) oe + g becomes ay in way,and e in wend.

(ORIGINALLY LONG).

Nth. ā, W. S. ā remains a, or becomes ai, as na, tha, hale, haill, hame, stane, nane, mair, braid, baid, raid, baith, gaist (ghost); and ay in thay (those).

The rimes bad = glaid, past = gaist, imply that the sound was the same or very similar.

In lord, the ā has become o.

ā + g becomes aw in awin.

Nth. ā, W. S. ā

becomes ai in maist.

Nth. ā̄, W. S. ā̄

becomes a in sa, swa, alswa.

Nth. ā̄, W. S. ā̄

becomes ei in leid, leif (leave), breid, feid, heill, leird.and o in or (ere).

Nth. \bar{a} , W. S. $\bar{e}a$ becomes ei in eik.

Nth. \bar{a} (+ h), W. S. $\bar{e}a$ (+ h) o (+ ch + t) in thocht (though).

Nth. \bar{e} (\bar{a}), W. S. \bar{a} remains e in euir, neuir, ferlie, erand (with change of e to a in 2d syllable).

It becomes ei in dreid, leit, deid (deed) and ai before r, as air, airlie, thair.

It has become o in ony, perhaps attracted by mony.

Nth. \bar{e} (+ g), W. S. \bar{a} (+ g) becomes a in ather.

Nth. \bar{e} (+ g), W. S. \bar{a} (+ g) becomes ai in fair.

Nth. \bar{e} , W. S. \bar{e} becomes ei in heir (here).

Nth. \bar{e} , W. S. $\bar{e}a$ before original g or h remains e, as he (high), e (eye) or becomes ie, as hie (high), also heich.

It becomes ei in zeir.

Nth. \bar{e} , W. S. $\bar{i}e$ (\bar{e}) becomes ei in heir (hear).

ne(h)st has become nixt.

Nth. \bar{e} , W. S. $\bar{e}o$ remains e in se (see) ai in nait (need),

and ei in heir (here).

Nth. ī, W. S. ī is usually represented by y, as wyfe, thyme, wyne, lyfe, tyde, fyne, schynand.

It is written yi in swyith, blyith.

It becomes e in schene, and is shortened in quhill.

Nth. īe, W. S. ē becomes e in ʒe.

Nth. ō (ōe), W. S. ō remains o in mother, son (soon) do, mot.

o + h becomes o + ch in brocht, socht, bocht; eu + ch in aneuch, leuch, and ew in anew (enough, with pl.).

It has become u in behufe, mure, luke, blude, fure, gude, and ui in buik, swith, forswith.

Nth. ū, W. S. ū becomes ou in toun, doun, hous, boun, thousand, foull (foul), and ow in bowre, thow, town.

Nth. ŷ, W. S. ŷ remains y in fyre, pryde, quhy, kythand, and is written yi in kyith (make known).

Nth. ēa, W. S. ēa becomes e in lesing,

and ei in deid, eist, eir, breid (bread).

Nth. ēo, W. S. ēo becomes e in fre, kne,

and ei in preist.

Nth. ēow (īow, ēw), W. S. ēow (ēo) becomes ow in trow, and ʒow in ʒow, ew in trew, blew, knew,

 and e in tre.

Nth. īo, W. S. ēo becomes ei in freind, and e in deuill (devil).

Nth. ōe (ē), W. S. æ becomes ei in weid.

Nth. ōe, W. S. ē becomes ei in speid, seik, sweit, meit (meet), feit, feir (company), and e in deme, grene, quemely.

CONSONANTS.

That the Northern consonants sounded very harsh to a Southern ear in the 14th century, we know from a passage in Trevisa's Higden. "Al the longage of the Northumbres . . . ys so scharp, slytting and frotyng (H. stridet) . . . that we Southeron men may that longage vnnethe vnderstonde." (Polychron. c. 59.) What exactly is meant by "cutting and grating," we do not know; but it is pretty clear that the gutturals were rougher, the aspirates stronger, and that the r took the Northumbrian "burr." The aspirated w (wh) was gutturalized to qu, as in quen (Mid. whan); and this sound seems to have taken a rougher breathing in Scottish, represented by quh, as in quhen. How far other Scottish consonants may have differed from their Southern values, we cannot be sure.

The following peculiarities may be noticed:—

b has fallen out from chalmer (chambre) and trimland (tremblant).

ch replaces Southern gh (from OE. h), as knicht (knight), bocht (bought).

In squechonis it represents Fr. ss (escusson).

d. The substitution of d for t in such cases of crasis as layd (lay it) dude (do it, Henryson) beid (be it, Dunbar) ford (for it, Lyndsay) is singular.

f usually represents Southern v(e) final, as lufe (love) knaiſis (knaves); also Fr. v in encheif (achever), engreif (engreuer).

g has fallen out from lenth, but is inserted inorganically in cusingis, courtingis.

k has dropped off from ta (114. 566) in both cases in the rime. Elsewhere tak. Ma for mak does not occur.

l silent and inorganic is sometimes inserted to lengthen a preceding vowel, as chalmer (chambre) walkin (waken). In forfaltour (L. L. forisfactum) it may be due to erroneous etymology.

p replaces b in capill (caballus) and wardrop (garderobe).

quh regularly represents Southern wh, as quhen (when) quhip (whip).

r occurs with metathesis in empreour, grassum (OE. gærsum), girth (OE. grið) breſt (burst).

s represents Southern sh in sall, suld, otherwise

sch is the regular representative of Southern sh, as in schame, scheild; also of ss in words from the French, as iſchar (huissier) pariſche.

Schill for chill (OE. cȳle) seems anomalous but is common.

As a rule, words which have initial ce or ci in OE. take ch, as child, chin, chosin, charcoill.

t represents Southern d in the pret. and p. p. of weak verbs, and also in onwart, benwart, inwart.

It has dropped out of cassin.

t, parasitic and silent, is suffixed to thocht (though). This rather singular phenomenon is common in Middle Scottish, as skaitht (GG) baitht (Dunbar) furtht, vitht, deitht, stryntht, fyltht, (Complaynt of Scot.) furtht, baytht (Pittcottie).

w has replaced v (u) in merwell, wassalage.

3 when initial, represents y, as 3eild, or g, as 3et (gate); when medial, the French l mouillé, as gal3art (gaillard), and so by analogy in coil3ear. In sen3eorabill, n3 represents French gn. In the compounds for3eild and for3et it may be considered initial. Graphically, it is used for z in Sarazine. It never replaces ch, as in the Midland, nor s as in some Western dialects.

FLEXION.

The regular ending of noun-plurals is in -is, as frostis, wayis. Plurals with vowel-change are men, feit. Unchanged plurals are hors, pund, conuent, thing; also 3eir and nicht in the phrases seuin 3eir, nyme nicht.

The plural-ending -is does not make a syllable.

The genitive sing. ends in -is, as lyfis end. Uninflected genitives are rude lufe, husband weid.

The 2d and 3d pers. sing. of the pres. ind. ends in -is: thow trowis, he askis. This ending does not make a syllable (lyis: wyse, l. 722). Sall, may, and will give thow sall, thow may, thow will; and haue, thow hes. In the pl. the verb has no inflection if the immediate subject be a personal pronoun, as we haif, 3e say, thay threip; but otherwise it ends in -is, as menstrallis playis, thir blonkis that vs beiris. The separation of the personal pronoun from the verb has the same effect in the 1st pers., as I dwell and leidis (l. 50), I beseik . . . and askis, (l. 942).

Weak preterits end in -it, as turnit, smylit.

The following strong preterits have different stem-vowels from those in modern English:

baid, draif, glaid, raid, rais, straid, straik

brest, fand, wan, 3ald

bair, come.

gaif, gat.

fure, leuch, swoir, tuke, wosche, wox.

kest.

Daw and quake, originally weak, have taken the strong preterits dew and quoke, and we have also the strong part. dawin.

The 2d pers. of the pret. is like the 1st, as thow gaif, fand, hecht, outrayd. Weak prets. and p. participles are sometimes contracted, as huit (huifit), graid (grait hit), command (commandit), threit (threipit), reüst (reuestit).

Of pret.-pres. and irregular verbs we may notice:

can, pret. couth

sall, " suld

wait, " wist, inf. wit, p. p. wittin.

will " wald

mon. subj. mot

tharth.

In the future we find shall and will distinguished as in modern English. I sall preif, I will returne; thow sall heir, thow will neuer gif; my lyffe salbe lorne (where salbe is a contraction for sall be and lorne is p. p. of leis), he will be found. Exceptions are: I will forzet; gif thow thriue sall; gif thay sell sall.

The imperative pl. resembles the sing. when followed by the pronoun, otherwise it ends in is: begin we (l. 130) mak zow baith boun (l. 882); but batteris on baldly (l. 883). And so when the imperative is repeated, as “thai may wele say, ‘takis, strikis, and imprisonys!’” Law of Armys, xxxvi. But if another word interpose before the repetition, the inflection may be dropped, as “gevis audience and draw neir.” Douglas, Æn. I. Prol.

The pres. part. ends in -and, as walkand, telland, while the verbal noun regularly takes -ing, as stout in stryking (l. 745). Indications of the confusion between the two forms which was coming in, may be seen in the participles cumming (397), during (924) and following (347). In fechtine (l. 60, elsewhere fechting) we see an instance of the phonetic degradation which has played such havoc with the later Scotch.

Strong p. participles, when not contracted, end in -in, as chosin, bakin, fundin. Contracted forms are tane, gane, farne, lorne, from tak, ga, fair, leis.

The participial ending is wanting in forzet (l. 148).

The infinitive sign is to, even before a vowel, as to abyde; once till, till encheif (l. 316).

The relative pronoun is that (at, 268). Quha is found once, (913). Quhilk does not occur.

This has thir (ON. þeir) for the plural; but this in ll. 648, 662, 725.

The indefinite article is ane; once a (864).

It has not seemed necessary to mark by italics the expansion of the ordinary contractions for and, that, the, etc., nor the insertion of m or n when represented by the tilde, as cū̄m̄in, wantō̄ū, printed cummin, wantoun.

METRE AND VERSIFICATION.

The ancient English epic verse before the Norman conquest—the verse of Beowulf and of Byrhtnoth—was constructed on a design of alliteration and stress, without rime, the predominant type being the long alliterative line of four stresses, with a distinct diæresis dividing it into two short lines of two stresses each. Great liberty was allowed in the use of unstressed syllables; so that the line, while accurately rhythmic, was metrically (or syllabically) irregular. After the Conquest, internal and external influences combined to transform the type, to make the verse more regularly metrical, to make rime an essential part, to use alliteration only as an added grace, or to do away with it altogether. In this general movement we may mark two distinct sequences of transformation, one in the north and one in the south. These we can trace in the poetry of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries.

The south, as most exposed to Norman and French influences, was the first to give up alliteration. Chaucer's Parson says he is "a Southren man, and can not geste rum, ram, ruf," that is, cannot make alliterative verses. In La3-amon's Brut, at the beginning of the thirteenth century, we find a long poem formed of lines of two-stress design, and so far resembling the old short line, (or half-line) but more carefully metrical, sometimes ending with rime or assonance, and sometimes alliterating without rime. The romance of King Horn (circ. 1300) closely resembles the Brut in structure, but is more exactly metrical and regularly rimed. The Ormulum, written at the beginning of the thirteenth century, is in a strictly metrical verse of "iambic" type, in lines of alternate eights and sevens, but with neither rime nor alliteration. The Poema Morale is in the measure of the Ormulum, but less strict in metre, and with rime at the end of each long line. The romance of Havelok, the Owl and Nightingale, and some other poems of the 13th century have a quite modern type of metrical rimed couplets with only incidental alliteration. This was the general drift of Southern versification until, near the close of the fourteenth century, we find the type firmly established in the poetry of Chaucer.

In the north and northwest of England the transformation took a somewhat different course. While the metrical couplet was used, as in the Cursor Mundi, there was also a revival in the fourteenth century of the old, long-lined alliterative poetry, with its fierce battle-fire, its piling up of details, tumultuousness of description, and looseness of grammatical construction, as if the images which thronged upon the poet's mind crowded and entangled each other in the struggle for expression. These features characterize Joseph of Arimathie, the Morte Arthure, Clannesse, etc. The chief home of this poetry seems to have been in the northwest, probably Lancashire and Cumberland, and it may have had a psychical connection with the outbreak of patriotic feeling characteristic of the time. It spread also into the Midland, and even into Scotland, where we find Dunbar, a great experimenter in metre, using it—perhaps its last appearance—in his Twa Mariit Wemen, about the beginning of the sixteenth century.

The basis of the long line of our poem may be said to be four (so-called) iambic feet : \cup —, \cup —, \cup —, \cup —; the sign \cup indicating an unstressed syllable. But this \cup might be replaced by two, or even more, light syllables. Hence we may take as a general norm :

To cum | to this pal|lice he preiss | is to preif.

This is a well-known type that runs through all English poetry. Compare—

Ic wylle mīne æþelo eallum gecyþan.—Byrhtnoth.

And þus ærest sæide in Ænglene londe.—Lazamon.

That they with the planet may rest and arise.—Tusser.

And starting around me the echoes replied.—Scott.

Slight variations were allowable: a short syllable might be omitted, as Thocht thy body be braissit in that bricht hew ;

or the position of the stress altered :

Fairand our the feildis full few thair I fand—and so forth, provided the design was not obscured.

In the time of Edward I. a new metrical form was introduced into English poetry, which attained a wide popularity: the caudate verses as they were called, in which the couplets of the strophe were interrupted by a line or lines with independent rimes, or a group of these closed the stanza, as with a cauda, or tail—a scheme borrowed from the Latin hymns of the Church, and perhaps suggested by the responses. At the north, this species grew greatly into favour, and old romances, such as King Horn (originally in short couplets) were re-written in the new form, and others composed in it or translated into it. While spirited, and pleasing in its ingenuity, those who preferred the stately and flowing couplet thought this verse not much better than doggerel. Chaucer has caricatured it in his Sir Thopas, which draws from the exasperated Host the cry—“Swiche a rym the devel I biteche !

This may wel be rym dogerel,” quod he.

Various experiments were made in combining the alliterative and rhythmical with the rimed and metrical verse.¹ Probably one of the earliest forms is that found in the romance of Gawayn. Here the unknown poet has simply cut up his poem, in the unrimed alliterative verse, into unequal blocks of from thirteen to thirty-seven lines, ending each block with a cauda consisting of a “bob,” followed by four short, two-stressed, alternately riming lines.

The caudate stanza became popular as a way of combining the two systems. Designs were invented of which the main body was in long alliterative freely rhythmical lines, with terminal rimes, to which was appended a cauda of short riming lines connected with the preceding with more or less ingenuity. Early in the fourteenth century we find a Midland poem on the Execution of Simon Fraser (cited by Schipper) of this design :—

¹ In point of fact, the two principles—the indigenous, of free rhythm, and the exotic, of strict metre—have contended in English poetry from the thirteenth to the present century ; and most of the apparent anomalies in our versification are due to this fact.

Lysteneþ lordynges, a new songe ichulle bigynne
 Of þe traytours of Scotland þat take beþ wyþ gynne.
 Men þat loueþ falsnesse and nule neuer blynnne,
 Sore may him drede þe lyf þat he is ynne.

Ich vnderstonde, Selde wes he glad þat neuer wes asad
 Of nyþe ant of onde.

The York and Towneley Mysteries contain many experiments in various designs of alliterative riming stanzas. Of these, that of the Flagellacio in the Towneley series comes nearest to our text. Here is a specimen:—

For no thyng in this world dos me more grefe
 Then for to here of Crist and of his new lawes ;
 To trow that he is Godys son my hart wold all to-clefe,
 Though he be neuer so trew both in dedys and in sawes.
 Therfor shall he suffre mekill myschefe,
 And all the dyscypyls that vnto hym drawes :
 For ouer all solace to me is most lefe
 The shedyng of cristen bloode, and that all Iury knawes.
 I say you,
 My knyghtys full swythe
 Thare strengthes will thay kyth
 And bryng hym be-lyfe :
 Lo, where thay com now.

Here the ninth line has two stresses, and the thirteenth three. The play is probably older than Rauf Coilzear.

This type of stanza found its way into Scotland, where it is met with in several poems.

The metrical form of Rauf Coilzear is a regular stanza of thirteen lines, the first eight four-stressed, alliterative, and riming alternately, then an independent ninth line of full length. These nine are followed by a cauda, or "wheel" of next mo abr

Explai
f
K
J

three short (typically two-stressed) lines carrying their own rime, after which a fourth short line gives the response to the ninth, completing the cauda and the stanza. The rime-scheme is a b a b a b a b | c d d d c.¹

The long lines are, in general design, the old alliterative line, modified however by the riming construction, which calls for a stress on the rime-syllable. As in the earlier form, the line is in two metrical sections, with, as a rule, two principal stresses in each, the stressed syllable carrying the alliteration. Using the letter a for the alliterating syllable, and x for the stressed syllable which does not alliterate, we may distinguish three types:—

A aa | ax or aa | xa

With ane capill and twa creillis | cuplit abufe
He cachit fra the court | sic was his awin cast

B ax | aa or xa | aa

Gangand with laidis | my gouerning to get
To cum to this palice | he preissis to preif

C aa | aa

Thay past vnto Paris | thay proudest in pane

¹ The same form is found in Golagros, the Awntyrs of Arthure, the Howlat, in Douglas's prologue to bk. viii of his Aeneid, in the Flying of Polwarth and Montgomerie, and, with differences, in Dunbar's Kynd Kittok, the Pistill of Susan, the Gyre Carling, and one or two more. A specimen in the Southern dialect occurs in Rel. Ant. ii, 7. It lent itself readily to burlesque, as in the Turnament of Totenham, in which the long lines are reduced to four. King James, in his Reulis and Cautelis, cites a stanza as an example of what he calls "tumbling verse." Now we know from Chaucer, Wyntoun, and others that the free alliterative verse was called "cadence." James's "tumbling verse" is therefore the equivalent of versus cadentes. A favourite device with some of these poets was to link each stanza to the preceding by the repetition of some word or phrase.

Of these types A is most frequent, C next, and B is comparatively rare. There are also many lines irregularly alliterated, or entirely without alliteration. Great licence is allowed in the use of unstressed syllables. Compare the lines

Baith tyde and tyme in all my travale
 Quhair euer thow fyndis me befor the, thi harberie is tane.

Notwithstanding the irregular appearance of this versification, the rhythm is well-marked and easily caught.

RIMES.

The rimes in this poem are remarkably accurate, most of them being perfect to both eye and ear. So scrupulous is the poet (or the copyist) that he sometimes alters the spelling when the sound is perfect without; thus, trauale: hale; trau-aill: sail. Occasionally he alters both spelling and sound to fit the rime; thus coilzear: thair; coilzeir: cheir; fewaill: sail; fewall: sall. The digraph ea does not occur except in coilzear.

Self-rimes occur, but rarely. See ll. 70, 303, 454, 805, 831. Weak rimes, such as fry: quemely; fattest: drest, are common. Double rimes occur at ll. 377, 709. The plural and verbal endings in -is do not make separate syllables.

Taking into account the scrupulous accuracy of the riming, such rimes as me: be: pardie; fee: be: cumpany; se: hie: he; we: lie, etc. (which are frequent in Dunbar and other poets) point to an i (ee) sound in the final e of monosyllables.

Rimes apparently defective are :— bad : glaid (113); glaid : stad (601). Glaid (adj.) elsewhere rimes with maid : raid (75). So in other Sc. texts, showing that the vowel is long.

wan : ken : man : than (765) ken rimes elsewhere with men, fen, etc.

name : lane : plane : fane (311); tane : gane : nane : blame (156).

start : hart : conuert (891). The pronunciation of -ert = -art is peculiar. We might suspect a Southern influence, but even Holland, who wrote in Moray, uses hert and hart interchangeably. In the Thornton MS. of AA. we have quarte : herte : starte, where Douce MS. has quert : hert : stert.

haue : craue : gaif : saue (494). As gaif is here the infinitive (for geif) it must be a case of exigency.

suppar : coilzear : bair : thair (181). We might correct suppar to suppair, as in l. 221.

haist : almaist : past : gaist (830).

deme : sene : bene : clene (675). Dunbar has, in his Welcome to Queen Margaret, “Rejoysing from the sone beme, Welcum of Scotland to be Quene.”

A license like name : lane ; nane : blame, above.

threip : meit : heip : leip (79). Of course a defective rime. richt : sicht : knicht : fecht (869); richt : knicht : dicht : hecht (792). The paucity of rimes in -echt probably compelled this.

rid : bed : led : cled (259).

wise : douchereis (929).

ruse : behuse : excuse : dois. See note on l. 80. Dunbar rimes dois with russ (ruse) and refuss.

nyse : Parys : clais : wise (428). This must be an imperfect rime, as ai was not a diphthong in M. Scottish.

threttis : meit (657) must be a corruption in the text.

REFERENCES.

- AA. The Awntyrs of Arthure at the Terne Wathelyne. Scottish Text Socy.
- E.E.T. The Early English Text Society's Publications.
- G. Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight. Early Eng. Text Socy.
- GG. The Knightly Tale of Golagros and Gawane. Scottish Text Socy.
- H. The Buke of the Howlat. Scottish Text Socy.
- LS. Legends of the Saints. Scottish Text Socy.
- MA. Morte Arthure, the Alliterative Version. Early Eng. Text Socy.
- ST. The Taill of Rauf Coilzear (in Scottish Alliterative Poems). Scottish Text Socy.
- W. Schir William Wallace. By Henry the Minstrel. Scottish Text Socy.
- Y.M. York Mystery Plays. Ed. L. Toulmin Smith. Oxford: 1885.
- Other works referred to are
- Avowynge of Arthur. Ed. J. Robson. Camden Socy.
- Barbour, John. The Bruce. Ed. W. W. Skeat. Early Eng. Text Socy.
- Clannesse. In Alliterative Poems. Ed. Morris. Early Eng. Text Socy.
- Clariodus. Ed. E. Piper. Maitland Club Pubs. 1830.
- Douglas. The Poetical Works of Gawin Douglas. Ed. J. Small. 1874.

- Dunbar. Poems of William Dunbar. Ed. J. Small.
Scottish Text Socy.
- English Metrical Homilies of the Fourteenth Century.
Ed. J. Small. 1862.
- Geste of Robin Hood. Eng. and Scotch Ballads. Ed. F.
J. Child. 1882.
- Henryson. Poems of Robert Henryson. Ed. A. Laing.
1872.
- John the Reeve. Anc. and Popular Poems of Scotland.
Ed. D. Laing. 1872.
- Lauder, William. Dewtie of Kingis. Ed. F. Hall. Early Eng. Text Socy.
- Lazamon's Brut. Ed. F. Madden. 1847.
- Libeaus Desconus. Ed. M. Kaluza. 1890.
- Pistill, the, of Susan. Ed. F. J. Amours. Scottish Text Socy.
- Robert of Gloucester's Chronicle. Ed. T. Hearne. 1810.
- Sir Amadace. Three Early Eng. Metrical Romances. Ed.
J. Robson. Camden Socy.
- Sir Degrevant. Ed. J. O. Halliwell. Camden Socy.
- Sir Ferumbras. Ed. S. J. Herrtage. Early Eng. Text Socy.
- Sir Gray Steill. In Laing's Early Popular Poetry. Ed.
Hazlitt. 1895.
- Towneley Plays. Early Eng. Text Socy.
- Wyntoun, Androw. Orygynale Cronykil of Scotland. Ed.
D. Laing. 1872.
- Ywain and Gawain. Anc. Eng. Metrical Romances. Ed.
J. Ritson. 1802.
-

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Of the Scottish Poets mentioned in Introduction.

JOHN BARBOUR.

MSS.

MS. in St. John's College, Cambridge, written in 1487.

MS. in the Advocates' Library, Edinburgh, written in 1489.

Printed Editions.

Andro Hart, Edinburgh, 1616.

Andrew Anderson, Edinburgh, 1670.

Robert Pinkerton, London, 1790.

John Jamieson, Edinburgh, 1820.

Spalding Club, Aberdeen, 1856.

Rev. W. W. Skeat, London, 1870 (Early Eng. Text. Socy.).

“ “ “ “ Edinburgh, 1891 (Scottish Text Socy.).

The Legends of the Saints, attributed by some to Barbour, have been edited for the Scottish Text Socy. by W. M. Metcalfe (1888-) and by C. Horstman, Heilbronn, 1891-2.

ANDROW WYNTOUN.

MSS.

Wemyss MS. in Wemyss Castle, 15th century.

Cotton MS. Nero D, xi., British Museum, written about 1440.

Royal MS. 17, D, xx. “ “ “ “ 1480.

MS. A, 71, Advocates' Library, Edinburgh, 15th century, and others of less importance.

Printed Editions.

D. Macpherson, London, 1795.
D. Laing, Edinburgh, 1872 (reprint).

KING JAMES I.

MS. (unique) in Bodleian Library, Oxford, written about 1475.

Printed Editions.

W. Tytler, Edinburgh, 1783.
G. Chalmers, London, 1824.
E. Thomson, Ayr, 1824.
C. Rogers, Edinburgh, 1875.
J. Thomson, Glasgow, 1877.
Rev. W. W. Skeat, Edinburgh, 1884 (Scottish Text Socy.).

ROBERT HENRYSON.

MSS.

The poems of Henryson are scattered in several MS. collections, the most important of which are :

The Asloan MS. written by John Asloan about 1515 ; in the library of Lord Talbot de Malahide.

The Bannatyne MS. written by George Bannatyne about 1568 ; in Advocates' Library, Edinburgh.

The Harleian MS. No. 3865, written about 1571 ; in British Museum.

Printed Edition.

B. Laing, Edinburgh, 1865.

(A new edition is promised by the Scottish Text Socy.).

HOLLAND.

MSS.

Asloan MS., described above.

Bannatyne MS., described above.

Printed Editions.

D. Laing, Edinburgh, 1823 (Bannatyne Club).

F. J. Amours, Edinburgh, 1891 (Scottish Text Socy.).

HENRY THE MINSTREL.

MS. (unique) in Advocates' Library, Edinburgh, written in 1488 by John Ramsay.

Printed editions are numerous ; the best are Chepman and Millar (earliest), 1508.

J. Jamieson, Edinburgh, 1820.

J. Moir, Edinburgh, 1885-9 (Scottish Text Socy.).

WILLIAM DUNBAR.

MSS.

Dunbar's poems are scattered through the following MS. collections :

Bannatyne MS., described above.

Maitland MS. written about 1570 ; in Pepysian Library, Cambridge.

Reidpeth MS. written in 1622 ; in Library of University of Cambridge.

Printed Editions.

D. Laing, Edinburgh, 1834.

J. Schipper, Vienna, 1891. Part I.

J. Small, Edinburgh, 1893 (Scottish Text Socy.).

WALTER KENNEDY.

Some poems attributed to Kennedy are included in Laing's edition of Dunbar.

GAWIN DOUGLAS.

MSS.

Aeneid, MS. in Library of Trinity College, Cambridge, written about 1525.

Aeneid, Elphynstoun MS. in Library of University of Edinburgh, about 1527.

Aeneid, Ruthven MS. in Library of University of Edinburgh, about 1530.

Aeneid, Lambeth MS. in the Archiepiscopal Library at Lambeth, about 1545.

Aeneid, Bath MS. in the Library of the Marquis of Bath, about 1547.

Kyng Hart. In Maitland MS.

Printed Editions.

Palice of Honour, W. Copland, London, 1553 (?).

Aeneid, S. Ruddiman, Edinburgh, 1720.

“ Bannatyne Club, Edinburgh, 1839.

Whole works. John Small, Edinburgh, 1874.

SIR DAVID LYNDSEY.

Printed editions are numerous; the best are

R. Pinkerton, London, 1792.

G. Chalmers, London, 1806.

D. Laing, Edinburgh, 1871 (reprint).

Part of his works are in Early Eng. Text Socy., 1865-71.

THE TAILL OF RAUF COILYEAR.

Bacon had no f or v

2 p. a.
followed by Roman and etc.
p. 100. 100. 100. 100.

Heir beginnis the taill of Rauf Coilyear how he harbrait King Charlis.

1. In the cheiftyme of Charlis, that chosin chiftane, Thair fell ane ferlyfull flan within thay fellis wyde,
Quhair Empreouris and Erlis and vther mony ane, Turnit fra Sanct Thomas befor the zule tyde.
Thay past vnto Paris, thay proudest in pane, 5
With mony Prelatis and Princis, that was of mekle pryde ;
All thay went with the King to his worthy wane,
Ouir the feildis sa fair thay fure be his syde ;
All the worthiest went in the morning,
Baith Dukis and Duchep^eiris, 10
Barrounis and Bachele^eiris,
Mony stout man steiris
Of town with the King.

2. And as that Ryall raid ouir the rude mure,
Him betyde ane tempest that tyme, hard I tell ; 15
The wind blew out of the eist stiflie and sture,
The deip durandlie draif in mony deip dell ;
Sa feirslic fra the firmament, sa fellounlie it fure,
Thair nicht na folk hald na fute on the heich fell.
In point thay war to parische, thay proudest men and pure, 20
In thay wickit wedderis thair wist nane to dwell.
Amang thay myrk montanis sa madlie thay mer,

The Tail of Rauf Coilzear.

Be it was pryme of the day, ^{10 A.M.}
 Sa wonder hard fure thay,
 That ilk ane tuik ane seir way, ^{Separate} 25
 And sperpellit ful fer.

Ithand wedderis of the eist draif on sa fast,
 It all to-blaisterit and blew that thairin baid. ^{separated}
 Be thay disseuerit sindrie, midmorne was past, Thair wist na knicht of the Court quhat way the King raid. 30

He saw thair was na better bot God at the last,
 His steid aganis the storme staluartlie straid ;
 He cachit fra the Court, sic was his awin cast, ^{with} Quhair na body was him about be fue mylis braid.
 In thay montanis, i-wis, he wox all will, ^{was a} 35

In wickit wedderis and wicht, ^{what} Amang thay montanis on hicht ;
 Be that it drew to the nicht,
 The King lykit ill. ^{was a}

Euill lykand was the King it nichtit him sa lait, 40
 And he na harberie had for his behufe ;
 Sa come thair ane cant Carll chachand the gait,
 With ane capill and twa creillis cuplit abufe.
 The King carpit to the Carll withoutin debait : ^{separated}

“Schir, tell me thy richt name, for the Rude lufe.” 45
 He sayis : “Men callis me Rauf Coilzear, as I weill wait ;
 I leid my life in this land with mekle vnrufe,
 Baith tyde and tyme in all my trauale :
 Hine our seuin mylis I dwell,
 And leidis coilis to sell ; 50

Sen thow speiris, I the tell
All the suith hale."

5. "Sa mot I thrife," said the King, "I speir for nane ill ;
Thow semis ane nobill fallow, thy answer is sa fyne."
"Forsuith," said the Coilzear, "traist quhen thow will, 65
For I trow, and it be nocht swa, sum part salbe thyne."
"Mary, God forbid," said the King, "that war bot lytill skill ;
Baith my self and my hors is reddy for to tyne ;
I pray the, bring me to sum rest, the wedder is sa schill,
For I defend that we fall in ony fechtine ; 60
I had mekill mair nait sum freindschip to find :
And gif thow can better than I,
For the name of Sanct July,
Thow bring me to sum harbery,
And leif me not behind." 65

6. "I wait na worthie harberie heir neir hand,
For to serue sic ane man as me think the,
Nane bot mine awin hous, maist in this land,
Fer furth in the forest, amang the fellis hie.
With thy thow wald be payit of sic as thow fand, 70
Forsuith thow suld be wel-cum to pas hame with me,
Or ony vther gude fallow that I heir fand Walkand will of his way, as me think the ;
For the wedderis are sa fell, that fallis on the feild."
The King was blyth, quhair he raid, 75
Of the grant that he had maid, Sayand, with hart glaid,
"Schir, God 3ow for3eild."

7. "Na, thank me not our airlie, for dreid that we threip,
 For I have seruit the 3it of lytill thing to ruse ; 80
 For nouter hes thow had of me fyre, drink, nor meit,
 Nor nane vther eismentis for trauellouris behuse ;
 Bot, micht we bring this harberie this nicht weill to heip,
 That we micht with ressoun baith thus excuse ;
 To-morne on the morning, quhen thow sall on leip, 85
 Pryse at the parting, how that thow dois ;
 For first to lofe and syne to lak, Peter ! it is schame."
 The King said : " In gude fay, Schir, it is suith that 3e say."
 Into sic talk fell thay 90
 Quhill thay war neir hame.

8. To the Coilzearis hous baith, or thay wald blin, stop
 The Carll had cunning weill quhair the gait lay :
 " Vndo the dure belieue ! Dame, art thow in ?
 Quhy Deuill makis thow na dule for this euill day ? 95
 For my gaist and I baith cheueris with the chin ;
 Sa fell ane wedder feld I neuer, be my gude fay."
 The gude wyfe glaidd with the gle to begin,
 For durst scho neuer sit summoundis that scho hard him say :
 The Carll was wantoun of word, and wox wonder wraith. 100
 All abaisit for blame
 To the dure went our Dame,
 Scho said : " Schir, 3e ar welcome hame,
 And 3our gaist baith."

9. " Dame, I haue deir coft all this dayis hyre, 105
 In wickit wedderis and weit walkand full will :
 Dame, kyith I am cummin hame, and kendill on ane fire,
 I trow our gaist be the gait hes farne als ill.

Ane ryall rufe het fyre war my desyre,
 To fair the better for his saik, gif we nicht win thair till. 110
 Knap doun capounis of the best, but in the byre;
 Heir is bot hamelie fair; do beliuie, Gill.”
 Twa cant knaifis of his awin haistelie he bad :
 “ The ane of 3ow my capill ta,
 The vther his coursour alswa, 115
 To the stabill swyith 3e ga.”
 Than was the King glaid.

10. The Coilzear, gudlie in feir, tuke him be the hand,
 And put him befor him, as ressoun had bene ;
 Quhen thay come to the dure, the King begouth to stand, 120
 To put the Coilzear in befor, maid him to mene.
 He said : “ Thow art vncourtes, that sall I warrand.”
 He tyt the King be the nek, twa part in tene ;
 “ Gif thow at bidding suld be boun or obeysand,
 And gif thow of courtasie couth, thow hes for3et it elene. 125
 Now is anis,” said the Coilzear, “ kynd aucht to creip, Sen ellis thow art vnknawin,
 To mak me lord of my awin :
 Sa mot I thriue, I am thrawin ;
 Begin we to threip.” 130

11. Than benwart thay 3eid ~~X~~uhair brandis was bricht,
 To ane bricht byrnand fyre, as the Carll bad :
 He callit on Gyliane, his wyfe, thair supper to dicht.
 “ Of the best that thair is, help that we had,

.

Efter ane euill day to haue ane mirrie nicht, 135

For sa troublit with stormis was I neuer stad ;
Of ilk airt of the eist sa laithly it laid.

ȝit was I mekle willar than,
Quhen I met with this man."

Of sic taillis thay began,

140

Quhill the supper was graid.

12.

Sone was the supper dicht, and the fyre bet,

And thay had weschin, i-wis, the worthiest was thair :

"Tak my wyfe be the hand, in feir, withoutin let,

And gang begin the buird," said the Coilzear.

145

"That war vnsemand, forsuith, and thy self vnset."

The King profferit him to gang, and maid ane strange fair.

"Now is twyse," said the Carll, "me think thow hes forȝet."

He leit gyrd to the King, withoutin ony mair,

And hit him vnder the eir with his richt hand,

150

Quhill he stakkerit thair with all

Half the breid of the hall ;

He faind neuer of ane fall,

Quhill he the eird fand.

13. He start vp stoutly agane, vneis micht he stand,

155

For anger of that outray that he had thair tane.

He callit on Gyliane his wyfe, "Ga, tak him be the hand,

And gang agane to the buird, quhair ȝe suld air haue gane.

Schir, thow art vnskilfull, and that sall I warrand ;

Thow byrd to haue nurtour aneuch, and thow hes nane.

Thow hes walkit, i-wis, in mony wyld land,

The mair vertew thow suld haue, to keip the fra blame ;

Thow suld be courtes of kynd, and ane cunnand courteir.

Thocht that I simpill be,
 Do as I bid the, 165
 The hous is myne, pardie,
 And all that is heir."

14. The King said to him self: "This is an euill lyfe, zit was I neuer in my lyfe thus gait leird; ^{for}
 And I haue oft tymes bene quhair gude hes bene ryfe, ^{abundant} 170
 That maist couth of courtasie in this Cristin eird.
 Is nane sa gude as leif of, and mak na mair stryfe,
 For I am stonischit at this straik, that hes me thus steird."
 In feir fairlie he foundis, with the gude wyfe, Quhair the Coilzear bad, sa braithlie he beird. ^{stomach} 175
 Quhen he had done his bidding, as him gude thocht, Doun he sat the King neir,
 And made him glaid and gude cheir,
 And said: "ze ar welcum heir,
 Be him that me bocht." 180

15. Quhen thay war seruit and set to the supper, Gyll and the gentill King, Charlis of nicht,
 Syne on the tother syde sat the Coilzear;
 Thus war thay marschellit but mair, and matchit that nicht. ^{parrot}
 Thay brocht breid to the buird, and braun of ane bair, ^{war} 185
 And the worthyest wyne went vpon hicht;
 Thay beirnis, as I wene, thay had aneuch thair,
 Within that burelie bigging, byrnard full bricht;
 Syne enteris thair daynteis on deis dicht dayntelie. ^{dearly}
 Within that wortheie wane ^{to wane} 190
 Forsuith wantit thay nane.
 With blyith cheir sayis Gyliane,
 "Schir, dois glaidlie."
^{be merry}

16. The Carll ^{spoke} carpit to the King cumlie and cleir, "Schir, the forestaris, ^{spoke} forsuith, of this forest, 195
 They haue me all at inuy ^{guarant} for dreid of the deir ;
 They threip that I thring doun of the fattest :
 They say I sall to Paris, thair to compeir ^{spread} Befoir our cumlie King, in dule to be drest. ^{troubled} ^{placed}
 Sic manassing [!] thay me mak, forsuith, ilk 3eir, 200
 And 3it aneuch sall I haue for me and ane gest ;
 Thairfoir sic as thow seis, spend on and not spair."
 Thus said gentill Charlis the Mane
 To the Coilzear agane :
 "The King him self hes bene fane ^{pleased} 205 Sum tyme of sic fair."

17. Of capounis ^{comes} and cunningis thay had plentie,
 With wyne at thair will and eik vennysoun ;
 Byrdis bakin in breid, the best that may be ;
 Thus full freschlie thay fure into fusioun. ^{plenty} 210
 The Carll with ane cleir voce carpit on he,
 Said, "Gyll, lat the cop ^{pass} raik for my bennysoun ; ^{passing}
 And gar our gaist begin, and syne drink thow to me ;
 Sen he is ane stranger, me think it ressoune."
 They drank dreichlie about, thay woshe ^{then}, and thay rais. ^{ever} 215
 The King with ane blyith cheir Thankit the Coilzear,
 Syne all the thre into feir
 To the fyre gais.

18. Quhen thay had maid thame ^{are} eis, the Coilzear tald 220
 Mony sindrie taillis efter suppair.
 Ane bricht byrnand fyre was byrnand full bald ; ^{frankly}

The King held gude countenance and company bair,
And euer to his asking ane answer he zald; ^{quid dicit}

Quhill at the last he began to frane farther mair : 225

“ In faith, freind, I wald wit, tell gif ze wald, Quhair is thy maist ^{know} wyinning?” said the Coilzear.

“ Out of ^{doubt} weir,” said the King, “ I wayndit neuer to tell :

With my Lady the Quene

In office maist haue I bene, 230

All thir zeiris fyftene,

In the Court for to dwell.”

19. “ Quhat kin office art thou in quhen thou art at hame, Gif thou dwellis with the Quene, proudest in pane?”

“ Ane chyld of hir chalmer, Schir, be Sanct Jame, 235

And thoct my self it say, maist inwart of ane :

For my dwelling to nicht I dreid me for blame.”

“ Quhat sall I cal the,” said the Coilzear, “ quhen thou art hyne gane?”

“ Wymond of the Wardrop is my richt name ;

Quhair euer thou findis me befor the, thi harberie is tane. 240

And thou will cum to the Court, this I ynderta :

Thou sall haue, for thy fewaill, ^{feel}

For my saik, the better sail, ^{will}

And onwart to thy trauaill,

^{just} shall be

Worth ane laid or twa.” 245

20. He said : “ I haue na knowledge quhair the Court lyes,
And I am wonder ^{why} wa to cum quhair I am vnkend.”

“ And I sall say the the ^{truth} suith on ilk syde, i-wis,

That thou sall wit weill aneuch ^{are} or I fra the wend.

Baith the King and the Quene meitis in Paris, 250

^{meets}

For to hald thair zule togidder, for scho is efter send.
 Thair may thow sell, be resoun, als deir as thow will prys ;
 And zit I sall help the gif I ocht may amend,
 For I am knawin with officiaris in cais thow cum thair.

Haue gude thoct on my name, 255
 And speir gif I be at hame,
 For I suppois, be Sanct Jame, Thow sall the better fair."

21. "Me think it resoun, be the Rude, that I do thy rid,
 In cais I cum to the Court and knaw bot the ane. 260
 Is nane sa gude as drink, and gang to our bed,
 For als far as I wait, the nicht is furth gane."

To ane preuie chalmer beliuie thay him led,
 Quhair ane burely bed was wrocht in that wane,
 Closit with courtingis, and cumlie cléd : 265

Of the worthiest wyne wantit thay nane.
 The Coilzear and his wyfe baith with him thay zeid,
 To serue him all at thay mocht,
 Till he was in bed brocht.
 Mair the King spak nocht, 270
 Bot thankit thame thair deid.

22. Vpon the morne airlie, quhen it was day,
 The King buskit him sone, with scant of squyary.
 Wachis and wardroparis all war away,
 That war wont for to walkin mony worthy. 275
 Ane pauyot preuillie brocht him his palfray,
 The King thoct lang of this lyfe, and lap on in hy ;
 Than callit he on the Carll, anent quhair he lay,
 For to tak his leif, than spak he freindly ;
 Than walkinnit thay baith, and hard he was thair. 280

The Carll start vp sone,
 And prayit him to abyde none :
 "Quhill thir wickit wedderis be done,
 I rid nocht 3e fair."

23. "Sa mot I thriue," said the King, "me war laith to byde; 285

Is not the morne 3ule day, foremost of the 3eir?
 Ane man that office suld beir be tyme at this tyde,
 He will be found in his fault that wantis, foroutin weir.
 I se the firmament fair vpon ather syde,

I will returne to the Court quhill the wedder is cleir. 290
 Call furth the gude wyfe, lat pay hir or we ryde,
 For the worthie harberie that I haue fundin heir."

"Lat be, God forbid," the Coilzear said,

"And thow of Charlis cumpany, Cheif King of cheualry,
 That for ane nichtis harbery
 Pay suld be laid." 295

24. "3ea, sen it is sa that thow will haue na pay, a

Cum the morne to the Court and do my counsall ;
 Deliuier the and bring ane laid, and mak na delay ;
 Thow may not schame with thy craft, gif thow thriue sall. 300

Gif I may help the ocht to sell, forsuth I sall assay,
 And als my self wald haue sum of the fewall."

"Peter!" he said, "I sall preif the morne, gif I may,
 To bring coillis to the Court, to se gif thay sell sall." 305

"Se that thow let nocht, I pray the," said the King.

"In faith," said the Coilzear,

"Traist weill I salbe thair,

For thow will neuer gif the mair
 To mak ane lesing.

25.

Bot tell me now, lelely, quhat is thy richt name?

I will forzet the morne, and ony man me greif."

"Wymond of the Wardrop, I bid not to lane ;

Tak gude tent to my name, the Court gif thow will preif."

"That I haue said I sall hald, and that I tell the plane ; 315 Quhair ony coilzear may enchaip, I trow till encheif."

Quhen he had grantit him to cum, than was the King fane,

And withoutin ony mair let, than he tuke his leif.

Than the Coilzear had greit thoct on the cunnand he had maid,

Went to the charcoill in hy 320

To mak his chauffray reddy ;

Agane the morne airly

He ordanit him ane laid.

26.

The lyft lemit up beliue, and licht was the day ;

The King had greit knowledge the countrie to ken. 325

Schir Rolland and Oliuer come rydand the way,

With thame ane thousand and ma of fensabill men

War wanderand all the nicht our, and mony ma than thay,

On ilk airt outward war ordanit sic ten ;

Gif thay nicht heir of the King, or happin quhair he lay ; 330

To Jesus Christ thay pray, that grace thame to len.

Als sone as Schir Rolland saw it was the King,

He kneillit down in the place,

Thankand God ane greit space ;

Thair was ane meting of grace 335

At that gadding.

27.

The gentill knight, Schir Rolland, he kneilit on his kne, Thankand greit God that mekill was of nicht ;

Schir Oliuer at his hand, and bischoppis thre,

Withoutin commoun people that come, and mony vther knight. 340

Than to Paris thay pas, all that cheualrie,

Betuix none of the day and zule night.

The gentill Bischop Turpine ^{coming} cummand thay se,

With threttie ^{convents} convent of preistis ^{clad in vestments} reuest at ane ^{judgement} sicht, Preichand of prophecie in processioun.

345

Efter thame, baith fer and neir,

Folkis following in ^{company} fer,

Thankand God with gude cheir,

Thair Lord was gane to toun.

28. Quhen thay Princis appeirit into Paris,

^{each} Ilk ^{rewe} rew ryallie with riches thame arrayis;

Thair was digne service done at Sanct Dyonyis,

With mony proud Prelat, as the ^{book} buik sayis.

^{thay} Syne to supper thay went within the Palys;

Befoir that mirthfull man menstrallis playis.

^{some - soon} Mony wicht wyfis sone, worthie and wise,

Was sene at that semblay ane and twentie dayis;

With all ^{nobles} kin principall plentie for his plesance.

Thay callit it the best zule than,

And maist worthie began,

Sen euer King Charlis was man,

Or euer was in France.

350

29. Than vpon the morne airle, quhen the day dew,

The Coilzear had greit thocht quhat he had vnder tane;

He kest twa creillis on ane capill with coillis anew,

Wandit thame with widdeis to wend on that wane.

“Mary, it is not my counsall, bot ^{zone} zone man that ze knew,

To do ^{3ow} 3ow in his gentrise,” said Gyliane.

“Thow gaif him ane outrageous blaw, and greit boist blew;

365

360

In faith thow suld haue bocht it deir, and he had bene allane.

370

For thy, hald 3ow fra the Court, for ocht that may be.

3one man that thow outrayd

Is not sa simpill as he said ;

Thairun my lyfe dar^s I layd,

That sall thow heir and se."

375

"3ea, Dame, haue nane dreid of my lyfe to day,

Lat me wirk as I will, the ^{fortune} weird is mine awin.

I spak not out of ressoun, the ^{to suith} suith gif I sall say,

To Wymond of the Wardrop, war the suith knawin :

That I haue ^{promised} hecht I sall hald, happin as it may,

380

Quhidder sa it gang to greif or to gawin."

He caught twa creillis on ane capill and catchit on his way

Ouir the daillis sa derf, be the day was dawin,

The hie way to Paris, in all that he mocht,

With ane quhip in his hand,

385

^{brass} Cantlie on catchand, ^{+ auld}

To fulfill his cunnand,

To the Court socht.

^{prompt} Graith thocht of the grant had the gude King,

And callit Schir Rolland him ^{to} till and gaif commandment—390

Ane man he ^{trusted} traistit in maist, atour all yther thing,

That neuer wald set him on assay withoutin his assent— ^{advised}

"Tak thy hors and thy harnes in the morning,

For to watche weill the wayis, I wald that thow went :

Gif thow meitis ony ^{man have} leid lent on the ^{moor} ling,

395

^{make ready} Gar thame boun to this burgh, I tell the mine intent ;

Or gyf thow seis ony man cumming furth the way,

^{whosoever}
Quhat sumeuer that he be,
Bring him haistely to me,
Befoir none that I him se
In this hall the day."

400

Schir Rolland had greit ferly, and in hart kest

Quhat that suld betakin that the King tald ;

Vpon solempnit zule day, quhen ilk man suld rest,

That him behouit neidlingis to watche on the wald,

Quhen his God to serue he suld haue him drest ;

And syne, with ane blyith cheir, buskit that bald.

Out of Paris proudly he preikit full prest

Intill his harnes all hail his hechtis for to hald :

He vmbekest the countrie outwith the toun ;

He saw na thing on steir,

Nouthur fer nor neir,

Bot the feildis in feir,

Daillis and down.

405

410

He huit and he houerit quhill midmorne and mair,

Behaldand the hie hillis and passage sa plane ;

Sa saw he quhair the Coilzear come with all his fair,

With twa creillis on ane capill ; thair of was he fane.

He followit to him haistely amang the holtis hair,

For to bring him to the King, at bidding full bane.

Courtesly to the knight kneillit the Coilzear,

And Schir Rolland him self salust him agane,

Syne bad him leif his courtasie, and boun him to ga.

He said : " Withoutin letting,

Thow mon to Paris to the King ;

Speid the fast in ane ling,

Sen I find na ma."

415

420

425

"In faith," said the Coilzear, "3it was I neuer sa nyse: ^{foolish}

Schir Knicht, it is na courtasie commounis to scorne.

Thair is mony better than I cummis oft to Parys, 430

That the King wait not of, nouthur nicht nor morne.

For to towsill me or ^{maek me} tit me, thoct foull be my clais, ^{clais}

Or I be dāntit on sic wyse, my lyfe salbe lorne." ^{lost}

"Do way," said Schir Rolland, "me think thow art not wise,

I rid thow at bidding be, be all that we haue sworne, 435

And call thow it na scorning, bot do as I the ken, ^{denie}

Sen thow hes hard mine intent;

It is the Kingis commandement:

At this tyme thow suld haue went, ^{shoud do}

And I had met sic ten." 440

"I am bot ane, mad man, that thow hes heir met,

I haue na myster to matehe with maisterfull men;

Fairand our the feildis, fewell to fet,

And oft fylit my ^{at} feit in mony foull fen;

Gangand with laidis, my gouerning to get. 445

Thair is mony carll in the countrie thow may nocht ken:

I sall hald that I haue ^{promise} hecht, bot I be hard ^{to} set,

To Wymond of the Wardrop, I wait full weill quhen."

"Sa thriue I," said Rolland, "it is mine intent,

That nouthur to Wymond nor Will 450

Thow sall hald nor hecht till,

Quhill I haue brocht the to fulfill

The Kingis commandment."

The Carll beheld to the knight, as he stude than;

He bair, ^{off} grauit in gold and ^{red} gowlis in grene, 455

Glitterand full gaylie quhen glemis began,

Ane tyger ticht to ane tre, ane ^{take} takin of tene.

start here

Trewlie that tenefull was trimland than,

Semelie schapin and schroud in that scheild schene;

Mekle worschip of weir worthylie he wan

Befoir, into fechting with mony worthie sene.

His basnet was bordourit and burneist bricht

With stanis of beriall deir,

Dyamountis and sapheir,

Riche rubeis in feir,

Reulit full richt.

His plaitis properlie picht attour with precious stanis,

And his pulanis full prest of that ilk peir;

Greit graipis of gold his greis for the nanis,

And his cussanis cumlie schynand full cleir;

Bricht braissaris of steill about his arme banis,

Blandit with beriallis and cristallis cleir;

Ticht ouir with thopas and trew lufe at anis;

The teind of his tewellis to tell war full teir.

His sadill circuitit and set richt sa on ilk syde;

His brydill bellisand and gay,

His steid stout on stray;

He was the ryallest of array

On ronsy nicht ryde.

Of that ryall array that Rolland in raid,

Rauf rusit in his hart of that ryall thing:

"He is the gayest in geir that euer on ground glaid,

Haue he grace to the gre in ilk iornaying:

War he ane manly man, as he is weill maid,

He war full michtie, with magre durst abyde his meting."

He bad the Coilzear in wraith swyth withoutin baid,

Cast the creillis fra the capill, and gang to the King.

"In faith, it war greit schame," said the Coilzear :

"I vndertuk thay suld be brocht
This day, for ocht that be mocht ;
Schir Knicht, that word is for nocht,
That thow carpis thair.

490

Thow huifs on thir holtis and haldis me heir,

Qubill half the haill day may the licht haue."

"Be Christ that was cristinnit, and his Mother cleir,

Thow sall catche to the Court, that sall not be to craue.

It might be preifit preiudice, bot gif thow suld comper,

To se quhat granting of grace the King wald the gaif."

"For na gold on this ground wald I, but weir,

Be fundin fals to the King, sa Christ me saue."

"To gar the cum and be knawin, as I am command ;

I wait not quhat his willis be,

Nor he namit na mair the,

Nor ane vther man to me,

Bot qubome that I fand."

500

"Thow fand me fechand nathing that followit to feid ;

I war ane fule gif I fled, and fand nane affray ;

Bot as ane lauchfull man my laidis to leid,

That leifis with mekle lawtie and laubour, in fay.

Be the Mother and the Maydin that maid vs remeid,

And thow mat me ony mair, cum efter quhat sa may,

Thow and I sall dyntis deill qubill ane of vs be deid,

For the deidis thow hes me done vpon this deir day."

Mekle merwell of that word had Schir Rolland :

He saw na wappinis thair,

That the Coilzear bair,

Bot ane auld buklair,

And ane roustie brand.

510

515

“It is lyke,” said Schir Rolland, and lichtly he leuch,
 “That sic ane stubill husband man wald stryke stoutly; 520
 Thair is mony toun man to tuggill is full teuch, Thocht thair brandis be blak and vnburely :
 Oft fair foullis ar fundin faynt, and als freuch.”

I defend we fecht or fall in that foly.
 Lat se how we may disseuer with sobernes aneuch, 525
 And catche crabitnes away, be Christ counsall I.
 Quhair winnis that Wymond thow hecht to meit to day?”

“With the Quene, tauld he me;
 And thair I vndertuke to be,
 Into Paris, pardie, 530
 Withoutin delay.”

“And I am knawin with the Quene,” said Schir Rolland,
 “And with mony byrdis in hir bowre, be buikis and bellis :
 The King is into Paris, that sall I warrand,
 And all his aduertance that in his Court dwellis. 535

Me tharth haue nane noy of myne erand,
 For me think thow will be thair, efter as thow tellis ;
 Bot gif I fand the, forrow now to keep my cunnand.”

“Schir Knight,” said the Coilzear, “thow trowis me neuer ellis,
 Bot gif sum suddand let put it of delay ; 540
 For that I hecht of my will,
 And na man threit me thair till,
 That I am haldin to fulfill,
 And sall do quhill I may.”

“3ea, sen thow will be thair, thy cunnandis to new, 545
 I neid nane airar myne erand nor none of the day.”
 “Be thow traist,” said the Coilzear, “man, as I am trew,

I will not haist me ane fute faster on the way ;
 Bot gif thow raik out of my renk, full raith sall thow rew,
 Or, be the Rude, I sall rais thy ryall array. 550

Thocht thy body be braissit in that bricht hew, Thow salbe fundin als febil of thy bone fay.”
 Schir Rolland said to him self: “ This is bot foly,
 To striue with him ocht mair :
 I se weill he will be thair.” 555
 His leif at the Coilzear
 He tuke lufesumly.

“ Be Christ,” said the Coilzear, “ that war ane foull scorne,
 That thow suld chaip, bot I the knew, that is sa schynand ;
 For thow seis my weidis ar auld and all to-worne, 560

Thow trowis nathing thir taillis that I am telland.
 Bring na beirnis vs by, bot as we war borne,
 And thir blonkis that vs beiris, thairto I mak ane bland,
 That I sall meit the heir vpon this mure to-morne,
 Gif I be haldin in heill, and thairto my hand, 565
 Sen that we haue na laiser at this tyme to ta.”

In ane thourtour way,
 Seir gaitis pas thay,
 Baith to Paris, in fay,
 Thus partit thay twa. 570

The gentill knight, Schir Rolland, come rydand full sone,
 And left the Coilzear to cum, as he had vndertane ;
 And quhen he come to Paris, the hie mes was done,
 The King with mony cumly out of the kirk is gane.
 Of his harnes in hy he hynt withoutin hone, 575
 And in ane rob him arrayit richest of ane.
 In that worschipfull weid he went in at none,

As he was wont, with the wy that weildit the wane,
On fute, ferly in feir, formest of all.

Richt weill payit was the King 580
Of Schir Rollandis cumming ;
To speir of his tything Efter him gart call.

The King in counsall him callit : “ Cum hidder, Schir Knicht, Hes thow my bidding done, as I the command ? ” 585

“ In faith,” said Schir Rolland, “ I raid on full richt,
To wachte wyselie the wayis ; that I sall warrand.

Thair wald na douchtie this day for iornay be dicht : ”

Fairand our the feildis full few thair I fand ;
Saif anerly ane man that semblit in my sicht, 590
Thair was na leid on lyfe lent in this land.”

“ Quhat kin a fallow was that ane, Schir, I the pray ? ”

“ Ane man in husband weid, Buskit busteously on breid,
Leidand coillis he zeid 595
To Paris the way.”

“ Quhy hes thow not that husband brocht as I the bad ?

I dreid me, sa he dantit the, thow durst not with him deill.”

“ In faith,” said Schir Rolland, “ gif that he sa had,
That war full hard to my hart, and I ane man in heill.” 600

He saw the King was engreuit, and gat furth glaid,
To se gif the Coilzearis lawtie was leill.

“ I suld haue maid him in the stour to be full hard stad,
And I had wittin that the carll wald away steill ;

Bot I trowit not the day that he wald me beget.” 605

As he went outward bayne,
 He met ane porter swayne;
 Cummand raith him agayne,
 Fast fra the zet.

“Quhair gangis thow, gedling, thir gaitis sa gane?” 610

“Be God,” said the grome, “ane gift heir I geif;
 I deuse at the zet thair is ane allane,

Bot he be lattin in beliue, him lykis not to leif;
 With ane capill and twa creillis cassin on the plane,
 To cum to this palice he preissis to preif.” 615

“Gif thow hes fundin that freik, in faith I am fane.

Lat him in glaidly, it may not engreif.
 Bot askis he eirnestly efter ony man?”

Than said that gedling on ground:

“Ze, forsuith, in this stound, 620

Efter ane Wymound,

In all that he can.”

“Pas agane, porter, and lat him swyith in,

Amang the proudest in preis, plesand in pane;
 Say thow art not worthy to Wymond to win, 625

Bid him seik him his self, gif thair be sic ane.”

Again gangis Schir Rolland, quhair gle suld begin,

And the zaip zeman to the zet is gane;
 Enbraissit the bandis beliue, or that he wald blin,
 Syne leit the wy at his will wend in the wane. 630

“Gang seik him now thy self,” he said vpon hicht,

“My self hes na lasair

Fra thir zettis to fair.”

“Be Christ,” said the Coilzear,

“I set that bot licht. 635

embraissit

Care but little for that

Gif thow will not seik him, my awin self sall,
For I haue oft tymes swet in seruice full sair.
Tak keip to my capill, that na man him call,
Quhill I cum fra the Court," said the Coilzear.

"My laid war I laith to lois, I leif the heir all : 640 Se that thow leis thame not, bot zeme thame full zair."

In that hardy in hy he haikit to that hall,
For to wit gif Wymondis wyuning was thair.

He arguit with the ischar offer than anis :

"Schir, can thow ocht say, 645

Qubair is Wymond the day ?

I pray the, bring him, gif thow may,

Out of this wanis."

He trowit that the wy had wittin of Wymond he wend,

Bot to his raifand word he gaue na rewaird ; 650

Thair was na man thairin that his name kend,

They countit not the Coilzear almaist at regaird.

He saw thair was na meiknes nor mesure nicht mend,

He sped him in spedely, and nane of thame he spaird.

Thair was na fyue of thay freikis that nicht him furth fend, 655

He socht in sa sadly, quhill sum of thame he saird.

He thristit in throw thame thraly with threttis ;

Quhen he come amang thame all,

zit was the King in the hall,

And mony gude man with all, 660

Vngane to the meit.

Thocht he had socht sic ane sicht all this seuin zeir,

Sa solempnit ane semblie had he not sene ;

The hall was properly apperrellit and paintit but peir,

Dyamontis full dantely dentit betwene. 665

It was semely set on ilk syde seir,
 Gowlis glitterand full gay, glemand in grene,
 Flowris with flourdelycis forrest in feir,
 With mony flamand ferly, ma than fyftene :
 The rufe reulit about in reuall of reid ;
 Rois reulit ryally, Columbyn and lely ;
 Their was ane hailsum harbery,
 Into riche steid.

670

With dosouris to the duris dicht, quha sa wald deme,

675

 With all diuers danteis dicht dantely ;
 Circulit with siluer semely to sene,
 Selcouthly in seir he was set suttelly ;
 Blyth byrdis abufe, and bestiall full bene,
 Fyne foullis in fyrrh, and fischis with fry ;
 The flure carpit and cled and couerit full clene ;
 Cummand fra the cornellis closand quemely,
 Bricht bancouris about browdin ouir all.

680

 Greit squeeconis on hicht,
 Anamalit and weill dicht,
 Reulit at all richt Endlang the hall.

685

“Heir is ryaltie,” said Rauf, “aneuch for the nanis,

 With all nobilnes anournit, and that is na nay.
 Had I of Wymond ane word, I wald of thir wanis,

690

 Fra thir wyis, i-wis, to went on my way :
 Bot I mon 3it heir mair quhat worthis of him anis,
 And eirnestly efter him haue myne e ay.”
 He thristit in throw threttie all atanis,

Quhair mony douchtie of deid war ioynit that day. 695
 For he was vnburely, on bak thay him hynt :
 As he gat ben throw,
 He gat mony greit schow,
 Bot he was stalwart, I trow,
 And laith for to stynt. 700

He thristit in throw thame, and thraly can thring,
 Fast to the formest he foundit in feir ;
 Sone besyde him he gat ane sicht of the nobill King.
 " 3one is Wymond, I wait, it worthis na weir.
 I ken him weill, thoct he be cled in vther clething, 705
 In clais of clene gold, kythand 3one cleir.

.
 Quhen he harbrait with me, be half as he is heir.
 In faith, he is of mair stait than euer he me tald.
 Allace that I was hidder wylit !
 I dreid me-sair I be begylit." 710
 The King preuillie smylit, Quhen he saw that bald.

Thair was seruit in that saill seigis semelie,
 Mony sen3eorabill syre on ilk syde seir ;
 With ane cairfull countenance the Coilzear kest his e 715
 To the cumly Quene, courtes and cleir.
 " Dame, of thy glitterand gyde haue I na gle,
 Be the gracious God that bocht vs sa deir.
 To ken kingis courtasie, the deuill come to me,
 And sa I hope I may say or I chaip heir. 720
 Micht I chaip of this chance, that changis my cheir, mange 10 in 22 in 23 in 24 in 25 in 26 in 27 in 28 in 29 in 30 in

Thair suld na man be sa wyse,
 To gar me cum to Parise,
 To luke quhair the King lyis,
 In faith this seuin 3eir !”

725

Quhen worthie had weschin, and fra the buirdis went,
 Thay war for-wonderit, i-wis, of thair wyse lord.
 The King fell in carping, and tauld his intent,
 To mony gracious grome he maid his record ;
 How the busteous beirne met him on the bent,
 And how the frostis war sa fell, and sa strait ford.
 Than the Coilzear quoke as he had bene schent, Quhen he hard the suith say how he the King schord.

730

“ Greit God ! gif I war now, and thy self with all,
 Vpon the mure quhair we met,
 Baith all suddandly set,
 Or any knight that thow may get,
 Sa gude in thy hall !”

735

Thir lordis leuch vpon loft, and lystinit to the King,
 How he was ludgeit and led, and set at sa licht ;
 Than the curagious knightis bad haue him to hing,
 “ For he has seruit that,” thay said, “ be our sicht.”
 “ God forbot,” he said, “ my thank war sic thing
 To him that succourit my lyfe in sa euill ane nicht !

740

Him semis ane stalwart man and stout in stryking :
 That carll for his courtasie salbe maid knight.
 I hald the counsall full euill that Christin man slais,
 For I had myster to haue ma,
 And not to distroy tha
 That war worthie to ga
 To fecht on Goddis fais.”

745

750

Befoir mony worthie he dubbit him knicht,
Dukis and digne lordis in that deir hall :
“Schir, se for thy self, thow semis to be wicht,
Tak keip to this ordour, ane knicht I the call ; 755
To mak the manly man I mak the of nicht.
Ilk 3eir thre hundreth pund assigne the I sall ;
And als the nixt vacant, be ressonabill richt,
That hapnis in France, quhair sa euer it fall ;
Forfaltour or fre waird, that first cummis to hand, 760
I gif the heir heritabilly,
Sa that I heir, quhen I haue hy,
That thow be fundin reddy
With birny and brand.

It war my will, worthy, thy schone that thow wan, 765
And went with thir weryouris wythest in weir ;
Heir ar curagious knichtis, suppois thay the nocht ken,
For thy simpill degre that thow art in heir.
I beseik God of his grace to mak the ane gude man,
And I sall gif the to begin glitterand geir.” 770 Ane chalmer with armour the King gart richt than Betaucht to ane squyar, and maid him keipeir ;
With clois armouris of steill for that stout knicht,
Sextie squyaris of fee,
Of his retinew to be ; 775
That was ane fair cumpany Schir Rauf gat that nicht.

Vpon the morne airly Schir Rauf wald not rest,
Bot in ryall array he reddyit him to ryde :
“ For to hald that I haue hecht, I hope it be the best, 780

To zone busteous beirne that boistit me to byde.
 Amang thir galzart gromis I am bot ane gest ;
 I will the ganandest gait to that gay glyde :
 Sall neuer lord lauch on loft, quhill my lyfe may lest,
 That I for liddernes suld leif, and leuand besyde. 785
 It war ane graceles gude that I war cummin to,
 Gif that the King hard on hicht
 That he had maid ane carll knicht
 Amang thir weryouris wicht,
 And docht nocht to do." 790

Vpon ane rude runsy he ruschit out of toun,
 In ane ryall array he rydis full richt ;
 Euin to the montane he maid him full boun,
 Quhair he had trystit to meit Schir Rolland the knicht ;
 Derfly our daillis discourand the doun, 795
 Gif ony douchtie that day for iornayis was dicht.
 He band his blonk to ane busk on the bent broun,
 Syne baid be the bair way to hald that he had hecht,
 Quhill it was neir time of the day that he had thair bene ;
 He lukit ane lytill him fra, 800
 He sa cummand in thra
 The maist man of all tha
 That euer he had sene.

Ane knicht on ane cameill come cantly at hand,
 With ane curagious countenance and cruell to se. 805
 He semit baldly to abyde with birny and with brand,
 His blonk was vnburely, braid and our hie.
 Schir Rauf reddyit him sone, and come rydand,
 And in the rowme of ane renk in fewtir kest he :

He seimit fer fellonar than first quhen he him fand, 810
He foundis throw his forcenes gif he nicht him se ;
He straik the steid with the spurris, he spreit on the bent.
Sa hard ane cours maid thay,
That baith their hors deid lay ;
Thair speiris in splenders away 815
Abufe thair heid spreit.

Thus war thay for thair foreynes left on fute baith, Thay sture hors at that straik strikin deid lay than.
Thir riche restles renkis ruschit out full raith,
Cleikit out twa swordis and togidder ran, 820
Kest thame with gude will to do vther skaith,
Baft on thair basnetis thay beirnis or thay blan.
Haistely hewit thay togidder, to leif thay war laith,
To tyne the worschip of weir that thay air wan ;
Na for dout of vincussing thay went nocht away. 825
Thus ather vther can assaill
With swordis of mettaill ;
Thay maid ane lang battaill
Ane hour of the day.

They hard harnest men, they hewit on in haist, 830
They worthit heuy with heit, and angerit with all,
Quhill thay had maid thame sa mait, thay failze almaist,
Sa laith thay war on ather part to lat thair price fall :
The riche restles men out of the renk past,
Forwrocht with thair wapnis, and euill rent with all. 835
Thair was na girth on the ground, quhill ane gaif the gaist ; “ 3arne efter 3eilding ! ” on ilk syde thay call.
Schir Rauf caucht to cule him, and tak mair of the licht :

He kest vp his veseir,
 With ane cheualrous cheir, 840
 Sa saw he cummand full neir
 Ane vther kene knight.

“ Now be the Rude,” said Schir Rauf, “ I reпреif the !
 Thow hes brokin condition, thow hes not done richt :
 Thow hecht na bak heir to bring, bot anerly we ; 845
 Thairto I tuik thy hand, as thow was trew knight.”
 On loud said the Sarazine : “ I heir the now lie !
 Befoir the same day I saw the neuer with sicht ;
 Now sall thow think it richt sone, thow hes met with me,
 Gif Mahoun or Termagant may mantene my nicht.” 850
 Schir Rauf was blyth of that word and blenkit with his face :
 “ Thow sayis thow art ane Sarazine :
 Now thankit be Drichtine,
 That ane of vs sall neuer hine
 Vndeid in this place.” 855

Than said the Sarazine to Schir Rauf succudrously :
 “ I haue na lyking to lyfe to lat the with lufe.”
 He gaue ane braid with his brand to the beirne by,
 Till the blude of his browis brest out abufe.
 The kene knight in that steid stakkerit sturely ; 860
 The lenth of ane rude braid he gart him remufe :
 Schir Rauf ruschit vp agane and hit him in hy :
 Thay preis furth properly thair pithis to prufe.
 Ilk ane a schort knyfe braidit out sone ;
 In stour stifly thay stand 865
 With twa knyfis in hand ;
 With that come Schir Rolland,
 As thay had neir done.

The gentill knight Schir Rolland come rydand full richt,
And ruschit fra his runsy, and ran thame betwene ; 870
He sayis : “ Thow art ane Saražine, I se be my sicht,
For to confound our Cristin men that counteris sa kene :
Tell me thy name tyte, thow trauelland knight !
Fy on thy fechting ! fell hes thow bene.
Thow art stout and strang, and stalwart in fecht, 875
Sa is thy fallow in faith, and that is weill sene :
In Christ and thow will trow, thow takis nane outray.”
“ Forsuith,” the Saražine said,
“ Thy self maid me neuer sa affraid,
That I for souerance wald haue praid, 880
Na not sall to day.

Breif me not with 3our boist, bot mak 3ow baith boun ;
Batteris on baldly the best, I 3ow pray.”
“ Na,” said Schir Rolland, “ that war na resoun ;
I trow in the mekle God that maist of nichtis may, 885
The tane is in power to mak that presoun,
For that war na wassalage, sum men wald say.
I rid that thow hartfully forsaik thy Mahoun :
Fy on that foull feind ! for fals is thy fay.
Becum Cristin, Schir Knight, and on Christ call. 890
It is my will thow conuert :
This wickit warld is bot ane start ;
And haue him halely in hart
That maker is of all.”

“ Schir Rolland, I rek nocht of thy rauingis, 895
Thow dois bot reuerence to thame that rekkis it nocht :
Thow slane hes oft, thy self, of my counsingis,

Soudanis and sib men, that the with schame socht ;
Now faindis to haue fauour with thy fleichingis.

Now haue I ferlie, gif I fauour the ocht. 900

We sall spuilze 3ow dispittously at the nixt springis, Mak 3ow biggings full bair, bodword haue I brocht.
Chace Charlis 3our King fer out of France.

Fra the Chane of Tartarie,
At him this message wald I be, 905

To tell him as I haue tauld the, Withoutin plesance."

"Tyte tell me thy name, it seruis of nocht ;

3e Sara3eins ar succuderus and self willit ay :

Sall neuer of sa sour ane brand ane bricht fyre be brocht, 910

The Feynd is sa felloun als fer as he may."

"Sa thriue I," said the Sara3ine, "to threip is my thoct ;

Quha waitis the Cristin with cair, my cusingis ar thay.

My name is Magog, in will, and I mocht,

To ding thame down dourly that euer war in my way : 915

For thy my warysoun is full gude at hame quhair I dwel."

"In faith," said Schir Rolland,

"That is full euill wyn, land

To haue quhill thow ar leuand,

Sine at thine end hell. 920

Wald thow conuert the in hy, and couer the of sin,

Thow suld haue mair profite and mekle pardoun.

Riche douchereis seir to be sesit in,

During quhill day dawis, that neuer will gang down.

Wed ane worthie to wyfe, and weild hir with win, 925

Ane of the riche of our realme, be that ressoun ;

The gentill Duches, Dame Iane, that clamis be hir kin
Angeos and vther landis, with mony riche toun.
Thus may thow, and thow will, wirk the best wise.

I do the out of dispair, 930
In all France is nane sa fair
Als scho is, appeirand air
To twa douchereis."

"I rek nocht of thy riches, Schir Rolland the knight,"
Said the rude Sarazine in ryall array ; 935

"Thy gold nor thy grassum set I bot licht ;

Bot gif thy God be sa gude as I heir the say,
I will forsaik Mahoun and tak me to his micht, Euir mair perpetuallie, as he that mair may.

Heir with hart and gude will my treuth I the plicht, 940
That I sall lelely leif on thy Lord ay,

And I beseik him of grace, and askis him mercy,

And Christ his Sone full schene ;

For I haue Cristin men sene,

That in mony angeris hes bene, 945

Full oft on him cry."

"I thank God," said Rolland, "that word lykis me,
And Christ his sweit Sone, that the that grace send."

Thay swoir on thair swordis swyftlie all thre,

And conseruit thame freindis to thair lyfis end, 950

Euir in all trauell to leif and to die.

Thay knichtis caryit to the Court, as Christ had thame kend.

The King for thair cumming maid game and gle,

With mony mirthfull man thair mirthis to mend.

Digne bischoppis that day that douchtie gart bring, 955

And gaue him sacramentis seir,
 And callit him Schir Gawteir,
 And sine the Duches cleir
 He weddit with ane ring.

Than Schir Rauf gat rewarid to keip his knichtheid : 960

Sic tythingis come to the King within thay nyne nicht,
 That the Marschell of France was newlingis deid :

Richt thair, with the counsall of mony kene knight,
 He thocht him richt worthie to byde in his steid,
 For to weild that worschip worthie and wicht. 965

His wyfe wald he nocht forzet, for dout of Goddis feid.

He send after that hende, to leif thame in richt ;
 Synne foundit ane fair place quhair he met the King,
 Euir mair perpetually,
 In the name of Sanct Iuly, 970
 That all that wantis harbery, Suld haue gestning.

FINIS.

Imprentit at Sanctandros be Robert Lekpreuik. Anno 1572.

Comments on story read 250 lines in 7/8 of NOTES.

LINE.

2. flan. Storm, tempest, ON. flan. The word does not seem to occur elsewhere in Early Scottish.
4. Sanct Thomas. Thomas à Beket, archbishop of Canterbury, assassinated A. D. 1170. His tomb at Canterbury was much resorted to by pilgrims. The anachronism involved in making Charlemagne return from this pilgrimage, did not trouble our poet.
5. pane. Apparel, attire, fr. Lat. pannus. "He 3af him robe of palle, And pane of riche skinne." Tristrem, 568. Analogous phrases frequent in the metrical romances are "prowdeste in palle," AA. 66, and "wlonkeste in wedys," AA. 9. The word was applied to gores of gay stuffs set into garments :—"in a pair of paned slops," Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iv. 1 ; and hence to the quarrels of glass set in windows.
10. duchepeiris. The douze pairs or paladins, Charlemagne's famous band of twelve great barons. The term was sometimes applied to any high nobles, as "Wyth duke3 and dusperes of dyuers rewmes." MA. 66. Arthur rides "Withe dukes and with ducheperes." AA. 4.
11. bacheleiris. Knights bachelors, the lowest grade of knighthood.
13. of town. It is not quite clear whether this adventure befell before or after the King's return to Paris.

LINE.

14. that ryall. That royal one. This substantive use of the adjective is common in the early Scottish poetry. "Quhen the pur present him had," i. e. "when the poor creature had presented himself," H. 92. So in ll. 170, 458, 712 of our text we have "gude" = good men; "that tenefull" = that wrathful one; "that bald" = that bold one.
17. deip. Apparently an error. Laing would amend to "drift;" but "drift" does not occur in Early Scottish.
20. pure. Sometimes used for "noble," "eminent." "The pacock, preciouss and pure," H. 81.
22. mer. Wander, go astray. "It made them for to mer amiss," Douglas, Kyng Hart, 114.
23. pryme. The end of the first quarter of the day. If reckoned from sunrise, at Yule, about 10 a. m.
28. that. That which; i. e. whatever (or whosoever).
33. cachit. Wandered, travelled, went. "Our land and see cachit with mekle pyne." Douglas, Aen. i. 1.
35. i-wis. Indeed, truly, from OE. gewiss. In the original it is uniformly printed "I-wis," as if a verb.
40. it nichtit him. It became night to him, i. e. night overtook him. "At ane ailhous . . . it nyghttit thaim thair," Dunbar, Kynd Kittok, 15.
45. the rude lufe. An uninflected genitive. So we have "þe pilgrame ansuer." Leg. de St. Andrea, 1068. In "husband weid," l. 593, "waithman weid," Dunbar, Fenzeit Freir, we may regard the noun as used adjectively, as in modern "sailor talk," "soldier clothes." Our language still retains this freedom of combination, as "law business," "railroad interests."

LINE.

46. Rauf. Ralph, or Radulphus. OE. hræd wulf, "swift wolf."
49. hine etc. Hence over seven miles, i. e. more than seven miles from here.
50. leidis instead of leid. This form occurs when the verb is separated from the personal pronoun, as "I beseik . . . and askis," l. 942. Or when the relative intervenes, as, "How salle we fare that fowndis." AA. 261.
55. traist etc. The meaning seems to be: "Believe it or not, as you will: if I am not a good fellow, it will be partly your own fault." To which the King answers that it would be great folly on his part to do anything to breed unfriendliness.
60. fechtine for fechtig. This phonetic degradation is very common in the late vernacular Scotch. "Comes hostin', hirplin' owre the field Wi' creepin' pace." Burns, Ep. to James Smith.
61. nait. Need, necessity. OE. nēad, Nth. nēd. It also signifies use, purpose. "A wappin was neur wrocht for sic a nate," Douglas, Aen. iv. 12. Cf. Towneley Plays, xxiii.
63. Sanct July. Saint Julian, the patron saint of travellers. His death is said to have occurred in A. D. 370. According to the life given in the Scottish Legends of Saints (14th century) Julian killed both his parents by an unhappy mistake, and in remorse devoted himself to a religious life. As a penance, he founded a hostelry for travellers on the bank of a dangerous river, and ferried over all who wished to cross. One winter night he was summoned by a sick and leprous child, whom, out of pity, he took to his house and cherished in his own bed. At daybreak the child revealed himself as an angel, told Julian that his penance had redeemed his sin, and promised him that thenceforth all who sought harbourage in his name, should find it. The opening of the legend is interesting :—

LINE.

“Qwene þat ʒunge mane I was,
 I trawalyt oft in sere place . . .
 þe trawalouris þane custume had,
 þat al day ʒed ore rad,
 And for trawale ware wery,
 Quhene þai come til þar herbry,
 And namely fra þai mycht it se,
 Hat or hud tak of, ore clath, þe rycht fut of the sterape rath,
 And to sancte Iulyane dewotly
 A pater noster say in hy,
 In hope þat al gud herbry suld haf, pat in sik wyse it suld crafe.”

L. S. II, 458.

67. me think. A confusion between “I think” (OE. þencan) and “me thinks” (OE. þincan) “it seems to me.” So in l. 60 we have “thow byrd,” where strict grammar would require “thé byrd.” In l. 176 we have the proper form with the dative: “him thoct.” The usage is not uncommon; e. g.: “me think it grete skill,” GG. 147; “ful pouer me thinc the.” Eng. Met. Hom. p. 140; “me think ʒow deif and dum.” Lyndsay, Thrie Estaitis. In the Cuckoo and Nightingale (l. 117) we have the full form: “It thinketh me I singe as wel as thou.”

LINE.

80. ruse. The E. E. T. changes to rufe and behufe, but the rime forbids this. To ruse is to boast of, to admire (cf. l. 481). Rauf says that as yet the King has had nothing from him to boast of, or be thankful for. "And haif few vertewis for to russ." Dunbar, xvii, 37. "Ill men . . . roysys thaim of thaire syn." Hampole, Psalter, xciii, 3.
82. eismentis. Comforts. "þat night he had ful nobil rest, With alkins esment of þe best." Ywain, 3383.
82. behuse. Needs, behoofs. Contracted from behuiffis. We find behuiffis and behuse riming with excuse in Clariodus iv, 1356, 2506. The verb buse—a further contraction of behuiffis—occurs in AA. 315: "me buse wende one my waye." See also Ywain, 1085, 1185.
83. heip. Possibly an error for keip. We still use "keep the house" for "stay in-doors." To keep the harberie would then mean to be sheltered in it.
84. nicht . . . excuse. Might with reason be excused for praising the lodging and entertainment after they had tried them.
86. pryse. A proverbial phrase. "Praise in departing." Tempest, iii, 3.
86. how that thou dois. According as thou farest (or hast fared).
87. lak. Blame, find fault with. "Nor na man will I lakkin or despyse." Douglas, Aen. i, Prol. "To loure on my neighbore and to lakke his chaffare." Piers Plowman (B) v, 160.
87. Peter! By Saint Peter. "3e, Peter! quoth þe porter." G. 813. "Peter! it am I." Chaucer, Shipmannes Tale, 214.

LINE.

96. cheueris with the chin. Shiver with the chin, have the teeth chattering with cold. "His teith chatterit and cheverit with the chin." Henryson, Testament of Criseide, 156.
98. glaid. Iaing and E. E. T. both insert "was," but it is the pret. of glyde, as in l. 482.
98. gle. Usually mirth, entertainment. Here apparently equivalent to hospitable reception.
99. sit. Resist, withstand. "He durst not sit anys my summondis." Dunbar, Twa Mariit Wemen, 319. "Pharaoh sits that process." Donne, Serm. cl. It is a contracted form of asit, OE. atsittan. "Non his dent asit might." Arth. and Merlin, 8150.
108. farne. Fared. Strong p. part. of fair.
109. rufe. This word as an adjective does not seem to occur elsewhere. OE. rōf, fierce, bold.
111. knap. Snatch, pluck, pull (from the perch). "Thow can knap doun caponis on the nicht." Henryson, The Wolf, the Fox, and the Cadgear, 17.
120. begouth. A Scottish form of "began," apparently by analogy with can, couth.
121. maid him to mene. Made himself to attempt, i. e., made an attempt. For mene cf. G. 1157. "þer schulde no man mene to þe male dere."
126. kynd aucht to creip. A proverbial phrase signifying "Nature (or breeding) ought to show itself." In the Towneley Mysteries (Pastores) we have "kynde will crepe where it may not go;" i. e. nature will creep where it cannot walk. The phrase occurs also in Everyman, 316. Rauf says that this is an occasion on which the King's breeding, or natural sense of propriety, ought to show itself, or otherwise he is ignorant (of good manners). Cf. the Dutch proverb: "Blood will creep where it cannot walk."

LINE.

127. vnknauin. Ignorant, untaught. "Vnknawin quhat was best to doon." Kingis Quair, 45. We have knawin "acquainted" in ll. 254, 532. A similar misuse, though sanctioned by custom, occurs in the modern "he is mistaken," for "he mistakes."
128. lord of my awin. Rauf is already lord of his own house, and it is for him, not the King, to do the honours of reception. So in GG. 147 Gawane will not venture to prescribe any rules of hospitality to the lord of the castle, saying, "To mak you lord of your avne, me think it grete skill." See ll. 166, 167.
133. Gyliane. Gillian, or Juliana. So "Saynt Gilyan" for Saint Julian, G 774.
135. Two lines wanting in original.
141. graid. Made ready, prepared. Contracted form of grailhit.
145. begin the buird. Take the highest place at table, and be seated first. "Bischop Baudewyn abof bi-genez þe table," G. 112. "Then sayd thei all, at a word, That cokwolds schuld begyne the bord, And sytt hyest in the halle." Cokwolds Daunce, 199. "Sith thou hast taken this estate Thou must begin the bord." John the Reeve, iii, 268. "He mot bygynne þat borde." P. Plowmans Crede, 557. "Ful ofte tyme he hadde the bord bigonne." Chaucer, Prol. 52.
153. faind. A somewhat rare word, meaning to stop, halt. "They fayne never are they falle at þe flode merkes,"

LINE.

MA. 1147. "Fenyhe the nowcht to fulfille thi heycht," Wyntoun, Cronykil, vii, 72. "Feyne 3ow noghte feyntly." MA. 1734. "Quhen thai saw the nobill King Cum stoutly on forowtyn fenzeing." Barbour (E) ix, 255. The meaning in the text seems to be, he did not stop from a fall (did not recover himself from falling) until he found (himself on) the earth. Perhaps faynding has a similar meaning in Barbour, Bruce, iii, 289: "quha tais purpos sekyrly, And followis it For-owt fayntice, or yheit faynding, He sall eschew it in party." That is: "whoever takes a firm purpose, and follows it without weakness or cessation, he shall achieve it [at least] in part."

156. anger. Pain, suffering, affliction, distress. "Thir angrys may I na mar drey." Barbour, Bruce, iii, 321. "In nane anger sal 3e be." Ywain, 1529. "The angyr na the wrechit dome." Bruce, i, 235. "Angers and yuels may hym appayre." Hampole, P. C. 691. See l. 945.
160. thow byrd. See note to l. 67. We find the more accurate form in earlier texts:

"In hart haf I sa mekil wa, pat my-self me byrd to sla." LS. ii, 468.
"pe burde fyrst aske leue." Pearl, 316.

170. gude. Good men. See note to l. 14.
174. foundis. Goes. "How salle we fare þat fowndis to fyghte?" AA. 261.
175. braithlie. Violently. "The wagande wynde brethly bessomes with byrre." (The rushing wind violently sweeps with noise) MA. 3661. "A . . .

LINE.

- sperre till his hert brathely was borne." Quatrefoil of Love, 201.
175. beird. Stormed, vociferated. From beir, noise. "Landbrist rumland . . . with sic beir." Douglas, Aen. vii, prol. 21.
184. but mair. Without more. No other company was present.
186. went upon hicht. Literally, "went on high." The meaning seems to be, "went joyously round."
188. byrmand. Here equal to "illuminated," "lit up," "blazing with light."
193. dois glaidlie. Be merry. "Sytt downe and do gladly." Wright's Chaste Wife, 24. "Do gladly, Sir Knight, sayde Robyn." Geste of Robyn Hood, 34.
209. bakin in breid. Baked in pastry. "Birdes bakene in brede." AA. 485.
210. fusioun. Abundance, plenty. "Of alle manere fusoun ynouȝ þey hadde." Libeaus Desconus, 112.
212. raik. Pass, go round. "Lo, quhair thay raik on rawe." Henryson, Robene and Makyne.
215. dreichlie. Steadily, regularly. "Drawene dreghely the wyne and drynkyne thereafyre." MA. 2028. "Dreȝly alle a longe day." Clannesse, 476. Dreghe is endurance, continuance. "Thus they dreuene . . . alle the dreghe of the daye." MA. 2915. OE. drēogan.
223. countenane. Demeanour, behaviour. "Be nocht in countenance ane skornar, nor by luke." Dunbar, To dwell in Court, 35. "The countenance and the maneres of alle the folk." Chaucer, R. R., 814.
227. maist wyning. Principal dwelling, chief abode. Cf.

LINE.

- “And where, quod I, is your most abyding?”
Assembly of Ladies, 264.
228. wayndit. Hesitated. “To cut his throat . . . he wayndyt nocht.” W. i, 198. I sall waynd for no wye to wirk as 3e will.” H. 458. OE. wandian.
230. office maist. Highest office.
237. for my dwelling. On account of my dwelling with you (and consequent absence from the Court).
239. Wymond. OE. wigmund, “guardian of battle,” or “protector of warriors.” Wymond is the name of the third soldier in York Mysteries, xxxiv.
240. thi harberie is tane. Thy lodging is secured.
244. onwart. Part payment, advance, but here profit.
248. on ilk syde. The truth on each side, i. e. the whole truth.
249. that. Demonstrative. Thou shalt know that well enough.
259. rid. Here, and in ll. 284, 435, 888, Tonndorf alters to red.
262. furth gane. Advanced.
273. squyary. Attendance or retinue of squires. “And profferit him a squyarie, To go with him in company.” Gray Steill, 1189.
276. pauyot. Not found elsewhere, but a servant of some kind. Jamieson (Scot. Dict.), conjectures pavisot, or shield-bearer, but gives no instance. Rauf did not need such an attendant to carry his “auld bukclair” (l. 517). Moreover, a pavise was not a shield, but a screen.
277. thocht lang. Grew weary or impatient.
278. anent. Near to, close by. “A wounde . . . an-ende hys hart.” Pearl, 1135.

LINE.

288. that wantis. That is lacking or missing. —
309. gif the mair. Thou wilt nevermore undertake (give thyself) to tell a lie. Rauf means that Wymond will certainly not dare to lie to him after the correction he has received.
313. bid nocht to layne. Offer not to conceal. "If ani man my name þe frayne, On al manere luke þou yt layne." Ywain, 2195. "Why layne you your name from me?" Malory, Mort Darthur, xviii, 13. "Layne not þe soþe," G. 1786. Icel. leyna. It sometimes means to refuse, as, "Late me in; thar thou noghte layne." Quatrefoil of Love, 253.
316. enchaip. Another form of eschaip. Where any collier may come off safely, I trust to succeed. In the Bruce we find enchapin for eschaping (C MS. vii, 75). The Oxford Dictionary (following Donaldson's Supplement to Jamieson) supposes it a form of encheap, "trade," but gives no proof of the existence of such a word, nor any reference for enchaip but the present passage. This epenthesis of n was not uncommon. Cf. encheif, enchauf, enroche, from OF. achever, eschauffer, acrocher.
321. chauffray. Ware, merchandise. A more common form is chaffair. "Bot thow be war, thow tynys off thi chaffair." W. vi, 460.
327. ma. More (in number). The distinction between this word and mair more (in quantity) is carefully preserved. So, in Southern English, the distinction between mo and more, is observed from Chaucer and Maundevile to Shakespeare and Ben Jonson.

LINE.

328. war wanderand. Perhaps an ellipsis of the relative:
"who were (or had been) wandering."
329. sic ten. Ten times as many were sent out toward each point of the compass. Cf. l. 440.
340. withoutin. Without reckoning, exclusive of.
342. zule nicht. Yule eve. It is the second day before Yule that the King is lost in the mountains, and he spends that night with Rauf. The next morning he returns, after bidding Rauf come "to-morrow," or Yule day, to the Court. Rauf sets out early on Yule morning.
343. Bischof Turpine. Archbishop of Reims in the latter part of the eighth century. The romances represent him as the trusted councillor of Charlemagne.
344. reuest. Robed in their vestments. "Tisiphone . . . in bludy caip reuestit." Douglas, Aen. vi, 9.
344. at ane sicht. At once; all together. Lit. "at one sight."
"Seuynne score of scheidis thai schew at ane sicht."
GG. 483.
347. following. The Midland form. So cumming (l. 397);
during (l. 924).
351. rew. Street, from Fr. rue. "We pas by secrete wentis and quiet rewis." Douglas, Aen. ii, xi.
352. Sanct Dyonyys. The famous abbey of Saint Dionysius, or Denis, the patron saint of France.
356. wicht qualifies sone.
358. principall. Principal men, high nobles.
360. worthie began. Worthily begun.
363. dew. This verb, originally weak, has taken the strong forms dew and dawin (l. 383).
366. wandit. Apparently the addition of a weak suffix to a strong preterit.

LINE.

367. bot 3one man that 3e knew. Unless you knew that man.
368. do 3ow in his gentrise. Trust yourself to his courtesy or good faith. "I do me in thi gentrice, be Drighthin." GG. 1111. "To souer in thi gentrice but signete or sele." Ib. 1105. "In his gentrice richt weill I dar assure." King Hart, 397.
370. and he had bene allane. Gyliane means that her presence restrained Wymond from violence.
371. for thy. Instrumental case of the pronoun. Therefore; on that account.
374. layd. A contraction for "lay it." So, "on thy awin perrell beid" (= be it), Freiris of Berwick, 541. "I stand ford" (= for it), Lyndsay, Satyre.
379. war. Subjunctive. I spoke not out of reason (i. e. my rebuke was just) to Wymond, if the truth were known.
391. thing. Used for man, or person, as in l. 481.
392. set him on assay. Undertake any adventure.
396. boun. Proceed, go. "To souper sone thai bownd." W. 485. "Bischopis bovnis to the burd." H. 685.
409. all haill. Entire, complete. Also used adverbially. "He governit alhaill the abbacy." Freiris of Berwick, 127. "All haill thy harte for till haif myne." Henryson, Robene and Makyne, 85.
415. huit. Contracted form of huifit. Cf. l. 493.
415. midmorne and mair. Mid-morn and past. "Be it wes mydmorne and mair." GG. 480. Cf. Barbour, Bruce, xiv, 206.
417. come. The preterit. The present is cum.
432. for to tousill. A loose construction. It might be freely rendered : As for maltreating me, or laying violent hands upon me (if such be your purpose) before, etc.

LINE.

434. do way. A form of dehortation, equivalent to "have done," "cease." "Do way! quap he, it schal be so." Orfeo and Heurodis, 226. "The quite knyzte bede, do way!" Sir Amadace, xxxviii, 5. "Do way, quoth þat derf man . . . þat speche." G. 1492.
435. be all that we haue sworne. By our vows of knighthood. A form of adjuration used by one knight to another; here somewhat facetiously addressed to Rauf.
439. suld haue went. Shouldst go.
442. myster. From Lat. ministerium, OF. mestier. It has two meanings :
- (1) craft, art, skill, occupation. "An engynour . . . that sleast wes of that mister." Barbour, Bruce, xvii, 434. "Husbandis and men of all mysteris." Ib. 542. "Tak me here Mi fundlyng for to lere Of þine mestere." Kyng Horn, 227.
- (2) need, necessity. "He maid succoure till his that myster had." Barbour, Bruce, xvii, 387. "Thai had gret myster of rest." Ib. 798. See note to l. 748. Rauf means either that he is under no obligation to fight wandering knights, or that he has not the requisite skill, fighting not being his business. The former is probably the meaning here.
451. nor hecht. Perhaps we should read na hecht.
455. gowlis. Gules, the heraldic term for red, said to be derived from Persian gul, a rose. "He bure a lyon . . . of gowlis full gay," H. 366, referring to the arms of the King of Scots : a red lion on a field of gold, within a double tressure. "Fayr wes the

LINE.

- feild with gold and goulis in greyne." GG. 475.
458. trimland. This and the following lines refer to Sir Rolland, whom we must conceive as trembling with excess of wrath or valour.
467. plaitis. Back and breast plates. Chaucer's Sir Thopas wears "a plate" over his hauberk.
468. pulanis. The projecting knee-pieces of plate-armour. "Polena, pars vestis militaris qua genua teguntur." Du Cange, s. v. "Pullane greis he braissit on full fast." W. viii, 1203. "Lufflych greuez with polayneþ piched þer-to." G. 576.
468. prest. Handsome, fine. "þer weore pope-iayes prest." Pistill of Susan, 75. "Princes þat er proper and prest." Minot (Wright) Pol. Songs, i, 751. "More people more handsome and prest." Tusser, lxxiii, 7. "As prety and as prest." Skelton, Phyllyp Sparowe, 264.
468. peir. Perhaps we should construe this as "peir of that ilk:" matching in design his back and breast plates. Cf. "of þe same painture Was lingell and trappure." Libeaus Desconus, 1663.
469. graipis. Bosses? clasps? The word does not seem to occur elsewhere. The construction would seem to require "on his greis."
470. cussanis. Armour for the thighs. OF. cuißsot. The Oxf. Dict. derives from cuißson; but Littré says that cuißsau and cuißsot are the only forms found in the old texts. Godefroy gives quesson. It occurs as quyssewes in G. 578.
471. braissaris. Armour for the arms. Fr. brassart.

LINE.

473. trew lufe. Probably should be trew lufes. True-love-knots, or lacs d'amour, were an ornament frequently met with in heraldry. They occur in the collar of the order of the Garter. King Arthur's mantle was "trauerste wyth trewloues in trete." AA. 354. In AA. 510, the "trewluffes" with which the knight was decorated, seem to have been embroideries on his cote-armure. In G. 612 Gawane wears a kerchief or veil over his aventayle, "enbrawdenn with tortors . . . and trulofez." The "tortors" are evidently torteaux, or circular plates of a red colour, so called in heraldry.
474. tewellis. Equipments, arms. "The toppe-castelles he stuffede with toyelys." MA. 3617. Previous editors changed it to "iewellis." Cf. "Trwe tulkkes in toures teueled wyth-inne." Clannesse, 1189.
474. full teir. Very tedious. A rather favourite formula. "It war full teir for to tell . . . the seir coursissis." GG. 213. "The order of thar armis, it war to tell teir." H. 578. To telle the dedis . . . my tonge were to tere." AA. 121. Sometimes written tore. "That were to tor for to telle." G. 165. "Hit were to tore for to telle of þe tenþe dole." Ib. 719.
475. circulit. Surrounded, bordered. Dunbar says of the lion in the royal arms of Scotland, which is within a flowered tressure:
- "On feild of gold he stude full mychtely,
With flour-de-lycis sirculit lustely." Thrissill and Rois, 97.
476. bellisand. Elegant, handsome. This word (not found elsewhere) seems to be from OFr. abellisant, agreeable,

LINE.

- pleasing. "Couleurs abellisans." G. de Machault, (in Godefroy).
477. stout on stray. Apparently an error. On stray (= "astray," as on lyfe in l. 591 is "alive") signifies "aside," "sidewise." The phrase stert on stray is common, applied to the shying, sidewise prancing, or starting of a mettlesome horse or frightened animal. "His stedes startun on straye." AA. 532. "Mony sterne [riders] . . . stertis on stray." GG. 19. The hunted fox "start on stray." G. 1716. Cf. Syr Degrevant, 1640. We have also the phrase stryke on stray. "One a stirtande stede he strykes one straye." AA. 511. "The stedis stakerit in the stour for streking on stray." GG. 916. It is probable that in the text we should read start instead of stout.
479. ronsy. Horse, Fr. roncin, from Lat. rocinus. "He rood upon a rouncy." Chaucer, Prolog. 390. The original meaning seems to have been work-horse as distinguished from war-horse. "Plus que ne pevent porter quatre roncin." Garin le Loherain, iii. Du Cange defines rocinus as "equus minor." Cf. Don Quijote, I, i. "Rocinante, nombre . . . significativo de lo que habia sido quando fué rocin." 481. rusit. Admired, praised. "This ilk Tewcer his enemyis of Troye Rusit and lovit." Douglas, Aen. i, 9. See note to l. 80.
481. ryall thing. See note to l. 391.
483. to the gre. To the [same] degree, i. e. corresponding to his appearance.
483. iorneying. Combat. "The journey was for the Kyng of England." Froissart (Berners), cli.

LINE.

485. he war, etc. He would be (or must be) a full mighty man who durst meet him with hostile intent (magre).
 "I will sey more, with that thow conne me no magre." Merlin, ii. "And 3e kun me na mawgre."
Ywain, 990. Fr. mal gré, maugré.
489. vndertuk. So in S. T.; in original vndertak.
494. may the hicht haue. That is, until the sun has ascended to the meridian.
496. catche. Go, proceed. "Kysse me . . . and I schal each hepen." G. 1794. See l. 33.
496. that sall not be to craue. There will be no entreaty about that; i. e., if you object, you shall be compelled to go.
498. gaif. For geif or gif, for the sake of the rime.
499. for na, etc. Tonndorf makes this and the following line part of Rolland's speech. But Rolland has intimated that Rauf's refusal to come might be interpreted to his prejudice as indicating contumacy or disloyalty to the King, and Rauf energetically repels the insinuation.
503. nor he namit, etc. Nor did he name thee more than any other man.
511. mat. Vex, molest, trouble. "þou mote3 me for to mate." Pearl, 612. The word has found its way into most European languages by the means of the game of chess, and is originally Arabic: shāh māt, "the king is dead," giving our "checkmate."
513. this deir day. Compare "this blessed day" in modern vernacular.
520. stubill. Stout, sturdy. "In stubbill array, throw rankest gers and corne." Henryson, Uplandis Mous, 92.

LINE.

521. toun man, as opposed to husband man, countryman.
533. buikis and bellis. A common oath. The books and bells are those used in the services of the Church. "That borne was in Burgoyne, by buke and by belle." AA. 30. "Scho blyssede his body with buke and with belle." Quatrefoil of Love, 33.
535. aduertance. Retinue. Originally attention, attendance, hence body of attendants.
538. gif I fand the. If I try thee, i. e. put thy good faith to the test.
538. forrow. Apparently the only instance of this verb. Forrow is "before," "in advance," and here may mean "go forward" "proceed." Or it may be an imperative use of the adverb, as "On, Stanley, on!" Or ga may have dropped out of the text. Cf. "3he ga forrow vs." Barbour, Bruce, vii, 145.
540. bot gif . . . delay. Unless some sudden (unlooked-for) hindrance delay it.
542. threit. Contracted form of threipit. To threip is to quarrel or fight; here used in the sense of "compelled," "forced."
545. to new. To renew (or make good) thy covenants.
546. airar . . . nor none. Rolland was not obliged to produce Rauf until about noon. See l. 400.
550. rais. Hack, slash, hew.

"Thys knyght nocht of hir [the serpent] myght rase." Rom. of Partenay, 5938.

"With his swerde so mightely gan race Through the umber into Troylus face." Lydgate, Troy Book.

We have the noun in G. 2076. "Ther þe ruful race he schulde re-sayue."

LINE.

552. als febil bone fay. As weak in thy good faith (as thou art splendid in appearance).
562. as we war borne. Cf. Chaucer, K. T. 775: "on his hors, allone as he was born."
563. blonkis. OE. blōnca. The original meaning was probably a light-coloured horse, but it is used in the earliest literature for "horse" simply.
563. bland. Probably an error for band, bond, covenant.
575. hone. Delay. A contracted verbal noun from hove, (huif) linger, tarry. "The turtour enterit but hone." H. 130.
590. semblit. Came, approached. The usual meaning of semble is meet, encounter. "Sex ware to symple to semble with hyme one." MA. 967. "Bot I semble with Saraʒenis." H. 484.
605. beget. This evidently means to deceive, trick, but instances are wanting. It is probably a variant of begeck, befool. "To begaik ther husbandis." Dunbar, Twa Mariit Wemen, 452 (Maitland MS.). A geck was a fool, laughing-stock. "The most notorious geck and gull." Twelfth Night, v, 1.
610. gedlyng. Fellow. OE. gædeling. "This gladdez myne herte that ʒone gedlynges are gone." MA. 2885. "Wat! harlot gadelyng, saide sche." Sir Ferumbras, 1234. "Stondith stille, thou gadiling." Gamelyn, 203.
611. ane gift I geif. I give a gift, i. e. I have news for you (?).
614. cassin. Placed, set. Contracted form of castin. The panniers were "set on the ground," apparently in expectation of custom. "Than had I cassin in cair

LINE.

- mony kene knight." GG. 1108. "Curches cassin thame abone," i. e. kerchiefs placed on their heads. Dunbar, Twa Mariit Wemen, 23.
615. preissis to preif. Insists on trying.
629. enbraissit. An error for vnbraissit, unfastened. The word with this meaning seems not to occur elsewhere.
635. set that bot licht. Care but little for that. "Of paramours he sette not a kers." Chaucer, Mill. T. 570.
648. this. Probably should be the regular plural thir, as in l. 690. This for "these" occurs in ll. 662, 725; but in both cases with the uninflected plural, "this seuin zeir." The pl. wanis is probably used on account of the rime.
649. He trowit. This seems superfluous, in both grammar and metre.
650. rewaird. Attention. "They will take rewarde to you . . . because of elde." Y. M. xx, 235. "Havinge un-to myn honour . . . no reward." Chaucer, Tr. v, 1736.
652. not . . . almaist. Almost not, scarcely. They accounted the collier scarcely worth notice.
655. furth fend. Should probably be one word, furthfend, meaning restrain, keep back. "Forfende thi foot from the sties of hem." Wyclif, Prov. i, 15.
670. reuall. Border, band, list, tressure (OFr. rieule). We are enabled to determine the meaning of this rare word by an interesting passage in the Wallace (ix, 106). We are told that, as Wallace was sailing to France, several ships hove in sight, on beholding which the skipper exhibited great alarm, and when Wallace inquired the cause, explained that the vessels were those of the Red Reiver, the most formidable and merciless of pirates. He knew him, he said, by his cote-armure, or heraldic cognisance, which bore a bar of blue and a bend of green, "and riwell ay off reid." This Reiver, it seems, was a historical person, named Thomas de Longueville. Wallace, we are told, overcame him, made him his friend and procured his pardon from the King of France. From this Thomas was descended the distinguished family of Charteris of Kinfauns, who bore as arms, argent, a fess azure (the "bar of blue") in a double tressure gules ("riwell off reid"); the tressure or border being an honourable augmentation, borne also in the royal arms of Scotland. The well-known arms of Charteris were doubtless familiar to the poet of the Wallace, as also the history of the family. Thus we fix the meaning of "riwell of reid" as a red tressure, border, or list. It is also plain why our poet selected it as a decoration for the ceiling of Charlemagne's hall. Every Scot knew the royal arms of Scotland: or, a lion rampant gules, in a double tressure, flory, counterflory, also gules; and knew also the ancient tradition that Charlemagne, grateful for services rendered him by Achaius, King of the Scots, and as a symbol of lasting friendship, added to his blazon the double tressure ornamented with fleurs-de-lis. Leslie, Historie of Scotland, v. Hence our poet, in describing the decorations of Charlemagne's hall, could not forget the "flour-delycis" (668) nor the tressure.

LINE.

675. dosouris. Canopies. "Dorserium, umbraculum

LINE.

- quod capiti sedentis superponitur." Du Cange, s. v.
 "Abofe the dece on doser to henge." G. 478. Cf.
 AA. 444. OFr. doussier.
678. he was set. We should probably read "it was set," referring to the hall, which the poet is describing.
 Cf. l. 666. Rauf has not yet caught sight of the King. We may render "It was cunningly adorned in marvellous variety."
679. blyth byrdis. Embroidered in the hangings or tapestry.
 "Birdes braudene aboue in brend golde brizte."
 AA. 444 (D).
679. bestiall. Animals collectively. "Wthir dantit gretar bestial." Douglas, Aen. vii. Prol. 79. "Ane re-vand wolf that levit . . . on bestiall. Henryson,
The Wolf, the Foxe, and the Cadgear, 3.
683. bancouris. Coverings to seats. "Benkis ourbeld with bancouris of gold." H. 672. "Dossours and qweschyns and bankowres full bryghte." AA.
 444. OFr. banquier.
686. at all richt. Exactly right; in their proper marshalling.
689. anournit. Adorned. "Wyth vertuez ennoured." G.
 634.
689. that is na nay. That is not to be denied. "Till accus Natur, this is no nay." H. 113. "The briddes singe, it is no nay." Chaucer, Sir Thopas, 55.
690. wald of. Would go out of. The suppression of the verb of motion is common. Cf. "Thow mon to Paris," l. 425.
692. worthis of him. What becomes (or has become) of him.
701. can thring. Pleonastic for tringis or thrang. This use of can and couth is very common in Early Scottish.

LINE.

- “Till him he ran, and out a suerd can draw.” W. i, 401. Cf. l. 826.
704. worthis. Will be, can be.
706. A line is missing in the original, evidently to the effect that Wymond did not present so imposing an appearance before.
713. seigis. Men, lords. “Thus assemblit thir segis, syris senzeourable.” H. 655. “Baith thai segis . . . stithly thai stude.” GG. 575. OE. Seeg.
717. gyde. Apparel, robe, gown. “A gyde of . . . grene.” W. i, 214. “Hir gyte was gray.” Henryson, Test. of Cresseid, 260. “She cam after in a gyte of reed.” Chaucer, R. T., 34. “Hir gyde was glorious and gaye, alle of gyirse grene.” AA. 366.
719. come to me. Came to me, tempted me.
720. hope. Fear, apprehend. “He hopid þat hys lord was hyrt.” Ywain, 2465. “He hoped he was wode.” Ib. 1675. “I haue slike pyne That I hope my hand to tyne.” Holy Rood, 821. “Vs commes som bodeworde, I hope it be badde.” Quatrefoil of Love, 250.
721. changis my cheir. To change the cheer was to make or become uneasy, to alarm, or distress (as indicated by change of countenance). “His cher ful oft con change.” G. 711.
727. for-wonderit. Surprised, amazed. “The wise of the weder for-wondred þey were.” AA. (D) 334. “Al for-wondered wat3 þe wy3e.” G. 1660.
731. sa strait ford. So straight forward, i. e. everything in order as it had occurred.
732. quake. This verb, originally weak, has taken a strong preterit.

LINE.

733. schord. Threatened. "Schorand the citie to distroy." Douglas, Aen. xii, 12. "Yone sterne for to schore." GG. 276. We have also the noun: "Thi schore compt I nocht ane caik." GG. 103. "He brukit not for all the busteous schor." W. vii, 1080. So Kyng Hart, 144, 376.
734. with all. Together.
740. set at sa licht. So lightly regarded. Cf. l. 635.
742. be our sicht. By our judgment or opinion.
743. God forbot. A more usual form is "Goddis forbot," forbot being a noun.
745. him semis. For he semis.
748. myster. Need. "His horsse . . . he gaif To the ladyis that mystir had." Barbour, Bruce, iii, 356. "In hys almus he [Macbeth] sew syluer Till all pure folk that had myster." Wyntoun, Cronykil, vi, 18. "Mend, geue ony myster be." Lauder, Dewtie of Kingis, 489. The curlew could write "with his neb, for mistar" (with his bill at need). H. 207. See note to l. 442. Fr. mestier. "Viegne qui d'avoine a mestier." Girard de Viane.
760. forfaltour. Forfeiture of a vassal's land for breach of feudal obligations. Lat. forisfactura.
760. fre waird. When a tenant in chief was a minor, the wardship fell to the King, who might bestow it upon any one whom he wished to reward. Chaucer was given the wardship of Edmond Staplegate in 1375.
765. schone. Shoes. "Thow salle wyne thi schone Apone the sowdane." Sir Percival of Galles, 1595. "That day he taucht hym so to done, That worthely he wanne his schone." Ipomydon, 977. Another phrase is "to win one's spurs," applied to a newly created knight's first feat of arms.

LINE.

766. wythest. For wichtest.
772. betaucht. Committed. The King ordered that a chamber with armour should be committed to a squire for Sir Rauf's use.
773. clois. The term was applied to the close-fitting plate-armour, as distinguished from the looser armour of interlocking rings or scales, such as the hauberk or jesserant.
774. of fee. His feudal vassals. We must understand that the yearly revenue of three hundred pounds was the rental of lands to be held by Rauf in capite.
782. gest. Jest, object of derision.
783. ganandest. Readiest, nearest. Ganand is "suitable," "fitting." "Heir is no meit that ganand is for 3ow." Freiris of Berwick, 254.
784. sall neuer, etc. Shall never a lord laugh aloud, while my life may last, that I for cowardice should leave off [draw back from fighting] and [I] living, moreover. That is, while I have life.
790. and docht. The carl, namely; that is, Rauf himself.
791. runsy. See note to l. 479.
799. neir tyme. Near the time of day of his former encounter.
809. renk. Lists, tilting-ground. "The douzty kny3thus . . . throw the renkus gon thai ryde." Syr Degrevant, 1286. See next note.
809. fewtir (OF. fautre, feutre). A support of some kind attached either to the breast-plate or saddle, to steady the lance and add force to the thrust. The word is frequent in the Fr. and Eng. romances of the 13th,

LINE.

14th and 15th centuries. "Lance sor fautre." Garin le Loherain. "Met la lance sor le fautre." Chev. de la Charette. "To him rides with his spere on feuter festened." W. of Palerne, 3593. Authorities differ as to the form and attachment of the fewter; but if the same as the "arest," it was a metallic projection from the right side of the breastplate. Attachment to the saddle seems irreconcilable with contemporary drawings. The knight placed his lance "in fewter" when about to charge, as Rauf does here when within the distance usual in the lists (rowme of ane renk).

810. fer fellonar. He supposes that it is Rolland, but finds him more formidable or ferocious in appearance.
811. foundis. Attempts. We find this verb used in the sense of "make an attempt on," "attack," in AA. 262: "That ofte foundis the folkes."
811. forcenes. Vigour, might. The adjective is common. "A fforsey mane and a ferse." MA. 3308. "Ferse and forssy in fight." GG. 487. "Of Grekis mast forey Diomed." Douglas, Aen. i, 3. "He raisit up his forceie arme." Clariodus, i, 83.
811. se. Sir Rauf is anxious to see the face of his adversary (now covered by his visor) to determine if it be Rolland or another, and this he might do by un-helming him.
815. splenders. "Thair speris in splendris sprent." GG. 618.
821. vther. Each other.
822. baft. Beat, smote. "Beft him with buffettis." Dunbar, Fenzeit Freir, 78. "The wroth of the goddis has doun beft The cietie of Troye." Douglas, Aen. ii, 10. "Bysyn in baile beft." H. 959.

LINE.

825. dout of vincussing. Fear of conquest, i. e. of being conquered.
831. heit. The original has heid, evidently an error for heit. See l. 838.
832. mait. Exhausted. "At þe last he watz so mat he myzt no more renne." G. 1568. "Mate I lay down on þe grownde." Ywain, 427. "þey buþ so mate þay mowe nozt go." Sir Ferumbas, 2506. See note to l. 511.
833. price. Honour, reputation. "The Pacoke of pryce." H. 90.
836. girth. Peace, truce. A metathesis of grith (OE. grīð). "Thay gafē no gamene no grythe þat one grownde growes." AA. 59.
837. zarne efter zeilding. Desire yielding; ask quarter.
839. veseir. Visor. The movable front part of the helmet, pivoted so that it might be raised or lowered. Sometimes the aventayle was divided into two sections, locking together; the upper, or visor, might be lifted so as to uncover the eyes, while the lower, or bever, might be moved so as to allow the knight to drink. Both visor and bever (often spelled "beaver") were frequently used for the whole aventayle, as in Hamlet, i, 2; and the aventayle for the bever, as in MA. 910. "Pysane, aventayle, and gorgere." Libericus Desconus, 1708, where the pysane is the camail falling from the helmet and protecting the back of the neck, the aventayle protects the face, and the gorgere the throat.
845. bak heir. In original, bakheir. "Back" is a backer, supporter, second. "Without knowledge of any

LINE.

- back to follow. Knox, Hist. Ref. i, 89 (Laing). "Welcome, my bully, my back!" Congreve, Old Bachelor, ii, 2.
850. Termagant. An evil spirit or demon, anciently supposed to be worshipped by Mohammedans and other heathen. The origin of the word is uncertain. In old romances it more frequently appears as Tervagan. "La loi y fut Mahon et Tervagan." Chanson de Rolland, 611. "þe soueðe hatte Teruagant, an heh god in ure land." Lazamon, Brut, 13912. "That file geaunt þat leved in Termagant." Libeaus Desconus, 1391.
851. blenkit. To blenk is to beam, radiate. "The bemes blythest of ble fro the son blent." (blent = blenkit) H. 3. Cf. "ice-blink." Rauf "beamed with his face," i. e. his face lighted up when he discovered that his adversary was a Saracen.
852. thow sayis, etc. He had not said so, but Rauf infers it from his appeal to Mahoun.
854. ʒsall neuer hine. See note to l. 690.
856. succudrously. Haughtily, arrogantly. The noun is surquedry or succudry. "Wher is now your sourquydrye?" G. 311. "Spekis na succudry." GG. 278. "Of surquidrye and foul presumpeioun." Chaucer, Troilus, i, 213.
857. I haue, etc. I am not so fond of life (i. e. I have no such fear of death) as to let you depart amicably (without a combat). Rauf has just said that one of them must die.
861. rude braid. Rood-breadth. Cf. "þe frensche men þai

LINE.

- made reculle wel an akers lengþe." Sir Ferumbras, 971.
863. pithis. Cf. Henryson. Foxe and Cadgear, 175. "My pith nicht mocht beir it."
873. tyte. Quickly. "He bad þat I sold tel him tite." Ywain, 409. "Elene also tite . . . gan her tire." Libeaus Desconus, 889.
880. souerance. Assurance of safety, truce. "Be-soghte hym of surrawns for sake of our Lorde." MA. 3182. Equivalent to "saiff-condyt." W. vi, 898. So souerit, assured of, safe from. Cf. W. viii, 870, and GG. 1105 (where it is misprinted soner in S. T.).
882. breif. Probably an error for brey, frighten. "A serpent . . . breyd thame all." Wyntoun, Cronykil, vi, 322. "Fra thay saw thair sembly, It culd thame bre." Douglas, King Hart, 187.
886. the tane, etc. One of us is able to overcome you. Perhaps we should read the presoun, i. e. thee a prisoner. Prison for prisoner is common. "Þis þing, sir, I ask of þe, þat al þis prisons may pas fre." Ywain, 3299. "Ledep wiþ hem þe ryche prysouns þat þay habbeþ y-take." Sir Ferumbras, 1000. "As overcome and prisoun A kniþt me hider gan sende." Libeaus Desconus, 405.
887. wassalage. Knightly deed. "In armys syne did mony hie waslage." W. i, 158. He is cumen of hie parage, And wonder doghty of vasselage." Ywain, 1240. "Sa for to de, him thoct it no waslage." W. x, 415. The original meaning was the knightly service which the vassal owed his feudal lord. Here

LINE.

- the meaning is that it would be no knightly deed for two to attack the Saracen when one was fully his match.
892. start. Brief space, moment. "þou shal leve but a start." AA. 259. "Ane hour or twa thinkis bot ane stert." Good Wyfe, 188.
898. with schame. To their discomfiture and disgrace.
904. the Chane of Tartarie. "The Cham of Tartarie With fourtie thowsand Turkis was redie To enter in his land." Clariodus, iii, 7.
905. this message, etc. I would this message were [brought] to him.
907. withoutin plesance. Without any softening of its harshness.
910. sour. Evil, vile. "Neuer se hym with syzt for such sour tourneȝ." Clannesse, 192.
911. als fer as he may. As far as he has power. Laing altered fer of the original to fers (spoiling the sense) and the other editors follow. S. T. gives the original reading in the margin.
916. warysoun. A word of several meanings. 1. Protection, safeguard, safety. "Thai dred full sar for thair awn warysoun." W. viii, 869. Modern "garrison" is the same word. There is also a verb, warys or warisch, meaning to protect. Arthur prays God "to warys fra wo Wawane the wight." GG. 1006. God says to Lot, "Nov walle þe a wonnyng þat þe warisch myzt." Clannesse, 921. It also means relieve. "Warische þam out of þaire wo." Altengl. Leg. N. F. p. 49, l. 33. "Than were my brother warished of his wo." Chaucer, F. T. 434. Or to recover, be healed. "For to sojourn þare a stownd, Til he wer warist of his wound." Ywain, 2653. "I am wathely woundide, waresche mone I neuer." MA. 2186. (Hence Fr. guérir). Or to refresh. "ʒe arn not wel naryst, nauþer of sost-naunce ne of slepe." G. 1094. 2. There is also another waryson, meaning reward. "Wel am I rewarded . . . now have I my waryson." Malory, Mort Darthure, ix, 12. Fabricius sends the treacherous physician to Pyrrhus "to get thi warisoune." Barbour, Bruce, xx, 544. King Edward promises "all Fyfe in warysoun" to the slayer of Bruce, Ib. ii, 206. "I sal hir gif to warisowne Ane of the foulest quisteroun." Ywain, 2399. See note to l. 936. Here Magog's meaning may be that his valour is a sure protection to his fellow-believers in his own land, or that he is richly rewarded for his prowess. The former interpretation is preferable.

LINE.

918. full euill wyn. There should probably be a comma after wyn. "That is full evil prosperity, to have land while thou art living, and then hell at thine end." Tonndorf puts a comma after land, in which case the construction would be: "That is a full evil [thing] to win land," etc. The Saracen, however, has not threatened a conquest of territory, but only a foray of devastation, and he has intimated that he is a great lord in his own country.
924. during, etc. Lasting until the day dawns that never will set, i. e. the last day. To be seized of these duchies while the world lasts. The article may

LINE.

- have dropped out before day. Durand would have been the regular form.
925. win. Happiness, prosperity. "By King Onotrius inha-beit first with wyne." Douglas, Aen. iii. 3.
927. Dame Jane. See Introduction.
930. I do the out of despair. I put thee out of doubt. "The noblest prynce, without any dispayre, That tyme alyue." Hardyng, Chron. 144. "And earles both they were, without dispayre." Ib. 151. Rolland assures the Saracen that he need not doubt him, and re-affirms the eligibility of the lady.
936. gold. In original, "god," and so in all the editions, but clearly an error for "gold." The Saracen despises the offer of wealth, but is willing to believe in the Christians' God. "Gold and garsomes" was a common phrase.
936. grassum. Treasure. (OE. gærsum). It occurs in the forms, garsome; "Grettere þan Gaynour of garso-mes and of golde." AA. 147; gersome: "weddid . . . with gyftis and gersomes." Ib. 697; garson: "with giftes and garsons." Ib. 697 (D and I texts); From garson the transition was easy to garysoun. Ladies would rather have Gawayn's company "þen much of þe garysoun oþer golde þat þay hauen." G. 1255. "And 3eue hem gret garysoun." Rob. Glouc. (H.) 409. This may explain the origin of the second warysoun, meaning "reward." "þou salt habbe garisome." Lazamon (B) 14162 where A has gærsume.
939. that mair may. Who (sc. God) is of greater power.
942. askis. See note to l. 50.

LINE.

945. angeris. Afflictions, distresses. See note to l. 156.
952. kend. Taught, directed. The poet considers the Saracen's conversion as happening by divine appointment.
967. leif thame. Perhaps reflexive: to pass their lives together, as was right. Or perhaps thame should be thair: to live there (on his new estates) rightly, sc. with his wedded wife.
-

GLOSSARY.

ABBREVIATIONS.

Dan. Danish; F. French; Gael. Gaelic; Icel. Icelandic; L. Latin; MDu. Middle Dutch; ME. Middle English; Nth. Northumbrian; OE. Old English, or West Saxon; OF. Old French; OFris. Old Frisian; ON. Old Norse; Sv. Swedish.

adj. adjective; adv. adverb; art. article; conj. conjunction; imp. imperative; inf. infinitive; int. interjection; pp. past participle; prep. preposition; pres. present; pres. part. present participle; pret. preterit; pron. pronoun; sb. substantive; subj. subjunctive.

abaisit pp. abashed, 101.

abufe adv. above, 43, 679, 816, 859.

abyde inf. await, remain until, 282, 485, 806.

aduertance sb. retinue, 535.

affray sb. alarm, cause of affright, 507.

agane, agayne adv. and prep. again, 155, 158, 422, 862; against, towards, 322, 608.

aganis prep. against, 32.

air adv. ere, before, 158, 824.

air sb. heir, 932.

airar adv. sooner, earlier, 546.

airlie, airly adv. (Nth. ǣrlice) early, soon, 79, 272, 322, 363, 778.

airt sb. (Gael. aird) quarter, point of the compass, 137, 329.

allace int. alas, 709.

allane adj. alone, 370, 612.

all hall adj. entire, complete, 409.

all kin all kinds of, 358.

almaist adv. almost, 652, 832.

als, alswa adv. (Nth. ǣllswæ) as, also, 108, 115, 252, 262, 303, 523, 758.

amang prep. among, 22, 37, 69, 782.

anamalit pp. enamelled, painted, 685.

and conj. if, 56, 241, 312, 440, 511, 604.

ane art., pron. and adj. (Nth. ān) a, 2, 385; one, 3, 441; any, 236, 576; alone, 260.

anent prep. (OE. on emn) opposite to, close by, 278.

anerly adv. only, 590, 845.

aneuch adj., adv. and sb. enough, (with singular) 160, 187, 201, 249, 525, 688.

anew adj. enough, (with plural) 365.

- anger sb. (ON. angr) pain, affliction, 156, 945.
- angerit pp. distressed, exhausted, 831.
- anis adv. once, 126, 644, 692.
- anournit pp. (OF. aourner) adorned, 689.
- appeirit pret. appeared, 350.
- appeirand air sb. heir apparent, 932.
- apperrellit pp. apparelled, decked, 664.
- ar pres. are, art, 767, 919.
- arguit pret. argued, 644.
- arrayis pres. array, 351.
- arrayit pret. arrayed, 576.
- assall inf. attack, 826.
- assay sb. trial of arms, combat, 392.
- at pron. (Nth. æd) that, 268.
- atanis adv. at once, 473, 694.
- ather pron. each, either, 289, 826, 833.
- atour, attour prep. (at over) over, above, 391, 467.
- aucht pres. ought, 126.
- auld adj. old, 517, 560.
- awin adj. (Nth. āgen) own, 33, 68, 113, 128, 377.
- ay adv. (ON. ey) ever, always, 693, 909.
- bacheleiris sb. bachelors, knights, 11.
- bad pret. bade, ordered, 113, 597.
- baft pret. (ON. *beafta) smote, 822.
- bald pret. (Nth. bad) remained, tarried, 28, 798.
- bald sb. delay, tarrying, 486.
- balr adj. plain, open, 798.
- balr adj. bare, stripped, despoiled, 902.
- balr pret. bore, 223, 455, 516.
- balr sb. boar, 185.
- baith adj. (ON. bāðer) both, 10, 48, 58, 250, 569, 736, 817.
- bak sb. backer, second, 845.
- bak, on adv. aback, backward, 696.
- bakin pp. baked, 209.
- bald sb. bold one, 407, 712.
- bald, baldly adv. bravely, boldly, 222, 806, 883.
- bancouris sb. (OF. banquier) coverings for benches, 683.
- band pret. bound, tied, 797.
- bandis sb. fastenings, bars, 629.
- bane, bayne adj. and adv. (ON. beinn) ready, willing, 420; quickly, 606.
- banis sb. bones, 471.
- barrounis sb. barons, 11.
- basnet (OF. bacinet) steel cap, helm, 462, 822.
- battaill sb. battle, 828.
- batteris on imp. lay on, smite, 883.
- bayne (see bane).
- be prep. by, 8, 34, 435, 611.
- be adv. by the time that, 23, 29, 383.
- befoir prep. and adv. before, 4, 119, 121, 400, 461.
- beget inf. beguile, deceive, 605 (see note).
- begouth pret. began, 120.
- begyilt pp. beguiled, entrapped, 710.
- beholdand pres. part. beholding, 416.

- behout pret. behoved, 405.
behufe sb. need, convenience, 41.
behuse sb. (see note) 82.
beir v. bear, 287, 563.
beird pret. (OFris. bære, noise) vociferated, stormed, 175.
beirne sb. (OE. bearn) man, warrior, 187, 562, 730, 781, 822.
bellue adv. (ME. bi life) quickly, 94, 112, 263, 324, 629.
bellisand, adj. elegant, splendid, 476.
ben adv. (Nth. binna) in, 697.
bene pp. been, 119, 205, 874.
bene adj. pleasant, beautiful, 679.
bennysoun sb. blessing, 212.
bent sb. grassy field, field, 730, 797, 812.
benwart adv. in, to the inner room, 131.
beriall sb. beryl, 463, 472.
beseik pres. beseech, 769, 942.
bestiall sb. animals, 679.
bet pp. (OE. bētan) kindled, 142.
betakin inf. betoken, signify, 403.
betaucht pp. (Nth. betaht) committed, given in charge, 772.
betuix prep. between, 342.
betyde pret. betided, befell, 15.
be tyme adv. betimes, 287.
bid pres. offer, 313.
bigging sb. (ON. bygga) house, dwelling, 188, 902.
birny sb. (OE. byrne) coat of mail, hauberk, 764, 806.
bischop sb. bishop, 339, 343, 955.
blak adj. black, 522.
blan pret. (Nth. blinna) ceased, paused, 822.
bland sb. agreement, engagement, 563.
blandit pp. blended, studded, 472.
blaw sb. blow, 369.
blenkit pret. beamed, 851.
blin inf. (Nth. blinna) pause, stop, 92, 629.
blonk sb. (OE. blōnca) horse, steed, 563, 797, 807.
blyith, blyth adj. blithe, cheerful, glad, 75, 192, 216, 407, 679.
bocht pret. and pp. bought, 370, redeemed, 180, 718.
bodword sb. message, 902.
boist sb. brag, fuss, 369, 882.
boistit pret. bullied, 781.
bone fay sb. (F. bonne foy) good faith, 552.
bordourit pp. bordered, 462.
borne pp. born, 562.
bot conj. but, 31, 553; unless, 367, 447.
bot gif conj. unless, except, 497, 540, 549.
boun inf. (ON. bua) make ready, 423; proceed, 396.
boun adj. (ON. buinna) ready, prompt, 124, 882.
boun (maid him) took his way, 793.
bowre sb. (OE. būr) chamber, 533.
braid adj. broad, 34; bulky, 807.
braid, sb. breadth, space, 861.
braid, sb. blow, 858.
braidit pret. (Nth. brægd) drew, 864.

- braissaris sb. brassarts, arm-pieces, 471.
- braissit pp. braced, armed, 551.
- braithlic adv. (ON. bráðr) violently, 175.
- brand sb. brand, burning log, 131, 910.
- brand sb. sword, 518, 522, 764, 806, 858.
- braun sb. brawn, 185.
- breid sb. breadth, 152.
- breid (on) adv. abroad, forth, 594.
- breid sb. bread, pastry, 185, 209.
- breif imp. (see note) 882.
- breist pret. burst, 859.
- bricht adj. bright, 131, 188, 222, 462, 551, 683.
- brocht pret. and pp. brought, 185, 269, 276, 489, 910.
- broun adj. brown, 797.
- browdin pp. (OE. brōden) embroidered, 683.
- brydill sb. bridle, 476.
- buik sb. book, 353, 533.
- buird sb. board, table, 145, 158, 185, 726.
- buklair sb. buckler, 517.
- burelie, burely adj. handsome, 188, 264.
- burneist pp. burnished, 462.
- busk sb. (LL. boscum) bush, 797.
- buskit pret. (ON. būask) made ready, dressed, 273; set forth, proceeded, 407, 594.
- busteous adj. boisterous, violent, 730, 781.
- bustiously adv. boldly, swaggeringly, 594.
- but adv. and prep. out, outside, 111, without, 184, 499.
- byde inf. remain, tarry, 285, 781, 964.
- byrd pres. (Nth. byreð) ought, behoves, 160.
- byrdis sb. birds, 209, 679.
- byrdis sb. (ME. burde) ladies, damsels, 533.
- byre sb. (OE. býre) stable, out-house, 111.
- byrnand pres. part. burning, 132, 188, 222.
- cacht pret. (OF. cacher) travelled, wandered, 33.
- cair sb. care, sorrow, 913.
- cairfull adj. anxious, uneasy, 715.
- cal sb. case, 254, 260.
- cal inf. call, 238.
- call subj. drive, drive off, 638.
- callis pres. call, 46.
- callit pret. called, 133.
- camell sb. camel, 804.
- can pres. know, 62.
- cant adj. (O.Dan. kantar, ON. kättr) brisk, active, 42, 113.
- cantile, cantly adv. briskly, boldly, 386, 804.
- capill sb. (L. caballus) horse, pack-horse, 43, 114, 365, 382, 418, 487, 638.
- capounis sb. capons, 111, 207.
- caril sb. (ON. karl) fellow, man, peasant, 42, 44, 93, 100, 746, 788.
- carping sb. (ON. karpa) talk, conversation, 728.
- carpis pres. speakest, 492.

- carpit pret. spoke, said, 44, 194, 211.
- carpit pp. carpeted, 681.
- caryit pret. (ON. keyra?) proceeded, returned, 952.
- cassin pp. placed, set, 614.
- cast sb. fortune, hap, 33.
- catchand pres. part. going, travelling, 386.
- catchit inf. (OF. cacher) go, 496; drive, 526.
- catchit pret. went, wandered, 382.
- caucht pret. went, proceeded, 838.
- caucht pret. cast, put, 382.
- chachand pres. part. travelling, 42.
- chaip inf. (OF. eschaper) escape, get away, 559, 720, 721.
- chalmer sb. chamber, 235, 263, 771.
- chane sb. khan, 904.
- chauffray sb. (OE. *cēapfaru) ware, merchandise, 321.
- cheiftyme sb. reign, 1.
- cheir sb. cheer, countenance, mood, 178, 192, 216, 348, 721, 840.
- cheualric, cheualry sb. chivalry, 295, 341.
- cheualrous adj. chivalrous, 840.
- cheueris pres. [Icel. kippa] shiver, chatter, 96.
- chiftane sb. prince, lord, 1.
- chyld sb. servant, attendant, 235.
- circult pp. surrounded, bordered, 475, 677.
- clais sb. clothes, 432, 706.
- clamis pres. claims, 927.
- cled pp. clad, covered, 265, 681, 705.
- cleikit pret. (OE. gelæccan) pulled, drew, 820.
- cleir adj. and adv. clear, loud, bright, 194, 211, 495, 706, 716, 958.
- clene adj. pure, 706.
- clene adv. clean, entirely, 125.
- clething sb. clothing, 705.
- clois adj. close, close-fitting, 773.
- closand pres. part. closing, joining, 682.
- closit pp. inclosed, 265.
- coft pp. (MDu. coft) bought, 105.
- collis, collis sb. coals, charcoal, 50, 305, 365.
- coll₃ear sb. collier, charcoal-burner, passim.
- columbyn sb. columbine, 672.
- come pret. came, 42, 417, 571, 658.
- command pret. and pp. commanded, 501, 585.
- commounis sb. common people, 340, 429.
- compelr (L. comparere) appear, 198, 497.
- conseruif pret. preserved, kept, 950.
- conuent sb. convents, 344.
- conuert pres. and inf. convert, be converted, 891, 921.
- cop sb. cup, 212.
- cornellis sb. (LL. cornale) corners, 682.
- couer inf. reform, 921.
- couerit pp. covered, 681.
- counsall sb. counsel, advice, 299, 367, 963; council, 584.
- counsall pres. counsel, advise, 526.

- counsingis sb. cousins, 897.
countenance sb. bearing, 223, 805 ; countenance, 715.
counteris pres. encountererest, attackest, 872.
countit pret. accounted, considered, 652.
courseir sb. courser, horse, 115.
courtasie sb. courtesy, good manners, 125, 171, 423, 429, 746.
courteir sb. courtier, 163.
courtes adj. courteous, 163, 716.
courtesly adv. courteously, 421.
courtingis sb. curtains, 265.
couth pret. (Nth. cūðe) knewest, knew, 125, 171.
crabitnes sb. ill-temper, surliness, 526.
craue inf. ask, 496.
creillis sb. baskets, panniers, 43, 365, 382, 418, 487, 614.
creip inf. creep, 126 (see note).
cristallis sb. crystals, 472.
cristin adj. and sb. Christian, 171, 747, 872, 890, 913.
cule inf. cool, 838.
cum subj. and inf. come, 254, 572.
cumlie adj. and adv. comely, handsome, 194, 199, 470, 716 ; handsomely, 265.
cumly sb. handsome (men), 574.
cummand pres. part. coming, 343, 801, 841.
cummin pp. come, 107, 786.
cummis pres. comes, 430, 760.
cumpany sb. retinue, 776.
cunnand adj. (ON. kunnandi) skilful, accomplished, 163.
- cunning sb. knowledge, 93.
cunningis sb. conies, rabbits, 207.
cuplit pp. coupled, joined, 43.
curagious adj. courageous, 741, 767, 805.
cusingis sb. cousins, kinsmen, 913.
cussanis sb. (OF. quessons) cuissarts, thigh-armour, 470.
dailis sb. dales, 383, 414, 795.
dantels sb. dainty things, ornaments, 676.
dantely adv. daintily, beautifully, 665, 676.
dantit pret. and pp. daunted, intimidated, 433, 598.
dar pres. dare, 374.
dawin pp. dawned, 383.
dawis pres. dawns, 924.
day (the) to-day, 401, 646.
daytels sb. dainties, 189.
daytelle adv. daintily, handsomely, 189.
debait sb. discussion, hesitation, 44.
defend pres. (F. défendre) forbid, 60, 524.
deid adj. dead, 512, 814, 818, 962.
deid sb. deed, 271, 513, 695.
deill inf. deal, 512, 598.
delp adj. deep, 17.
deip sb. (see note) 17.
deir adj. and adv. dear, 513 ; dearly, 105, 252, 370, 718.
deir sb. deer, 196.
deis sb. dais, table, 189.
delluer the haste thyself, hasten, 300.

- deme inf.* judge, 675.
dentit pp. set, 665.
derf adj. (ON. diarfr) bold, strong, 383.
deuill sb. devil, 95, 719.
deuise pres. report, declare, 612.
dew pret. dawned, 363.
dicht inf. (OE. dihtan) prepare, 133.
dicht pp. prepared, arranged, ready, 142, 189, 588, 676.
digne adj. (F. digne) worthy, noble, venerable, 352, 753, 955.
ding inf. (ON. dengja) strike, 915.
discouerand pres. part. reconnoitring, surveying, 795.
dispair, sb. doubt, 930.
dispittously adv. pitilessly, without mercy, 901.
disseuer inf. separate, part, 525.
disseuerit pret. separated, parted, 29.
do pres. put, 368, 930.
docht pret. (OE. dōhte) was able, 790.
dois pres. dost, 86, 896.
dois glaidlie be merry, 193.
dosouris sb. (OF. doussier) canopies, 675.
doucherels sb. duchies, 923, 933.
douchtie sb. doughty one, warrior, 588, 695, 796, 955.
doun adv. down, 111, 177, 197, 333, 915.
doun sb. down, hill, 414, 796.
dourly adv. (L. durus) violently, strongly, 915.
dout sb. fear, 825, 966.
do way (see note) 434.
draif pret. drove, 17, 27.
dreichlie adv. (OE. drēogan) steadily, regularly, 215.
dreid sb. fear, 79, 196, 376.
dreid pres. fear, 237, 598, 710.
dress pp. placed, put, 199.
dress (him) pp. addressed himself, 406.
drichtine sb. (Nth. drihten) the Lord, 853.
dubbit pret. (F. adouber) dubbed, 752.
duchepeiris sb. peers, paladins, 10.
dukis sb. dukes, 10, 753.
dule sb. (OF. doel) mourning, trouble, 95, 199.
durandlie adv. continuously, steadily, 17.
dure sb. door, 94, 102, 120, 675.
during pres. part. enduring, continuing, 924.
dyamountis sb. diamonds, 464, 665.
dyntis sb. blows, 512.
e sb. eye, 693, 715.
efter prep. after, 135, 251, 346.
efter adv. according, 537.
eik conj. eke, also, 208.
eir sb. ear, 150.
eird sb. (OE. eorðe) earth, 154.
eird sb. (OE. eard) land, country, 171.
earnestly adv. earnestly, pressingly, 618; attentively, 693.
eis sb. ease, 220.
eismentis sb. easements, comforts, 82.

- eist sb. east, 16, 27, 137.
ells adv. else, otherwise, 127, 539.
enbraissit pp. unfastened, 629 (see note).
enchaip inf. (see note) 316.
encheif inf. (F. achever) succeed, prosper, 316.
endlang prep. along, 687.
engreif inf. (OF. engrever) give offence, do harm, 617.
engreult pp. displeased, 601.
enteris pres. enter, come in, 189.
erand sb. errand, 536, 546.
erlis sb. earls, 3.
euer adv. ever, 224, 240, 361.
cuill adj. and adv. evil, bad, 95, 168, 918; badly, 40, 835.
cuin adv. straightway, 793.

failȝe pres. (F. faillir) faint, 832.
faind pret. (see note) 153.
faindis pres. (OE. fandian) at-temptest, 899.
fair sb. fare, provision, 112, 206;
 load (?) 417.
fair sb. (OE. fār) behaviour, 147.
fair inf. fare, 110, 258; go, 284, 633. fairand pres. part. going, proceeding, 443, 589.
fairlie adv. fairly, handsomely, 174.
fais sb. foes, 751.
fallow sb. fellow, 54, 72; adversary, 876.
fand pres. (OE. fandian) try, 538.
fand pret. found, 70, 72, 505, 810.
fane adj. glad, pleased, 205, 317, 418, 616.

farne pp. fared, 108.
fauour sb. favour, 899.
fay sb. (OF. fei) faith, 88, 97, 509, 552, 569, 889.
faynt adj. faint-hearted, cowardly, 523.
febil adj. weak, frail, 552.
fechand pres. part. bringing, 506.
fecht pres. and inf. fight, 524, 751.
fecht sb. fight, 875.
fechtine, fechtig sb. fighting, combat, 60, 461, 874.
fee (of) sb. in his service, 774.
feld sb. (OE. fæðu) hostility, anger, 506, 966.
felid sb. field, land, 8, 74, 413, 443, 589.
feind sb. fiend, 889.
feir (in, into) (OE. gefēra) in company, together, 118, 144, 174, 218, 347, 413, 465, 579, 668, 702.
feirslic adv. fiercely, 18.
felt sb. feet, 444.
feld pret. felt, 97.
fell sb. (ON. fjall) hill, rocky hill, 2, 19, 69. fell adj. (OF. fel) fierce, cruel, severe, 74, 97, 731, 874.
fellonar adj. more formidable, 810.
felloun adj. (OF. felon) wicked, 911.
fellounlic adv. fiercely, violently, 18.
fēn sb. mire, 444.
fend (furth) inf. restrain, keep back, 655.
fensabill adj. warlike, 327.
fer adj. far, 26, 69, 346, 412, 810 911.

- ferlic, ferly sb. (Nth. feerlic) wonder, marvel, 402, 669, 900.
- ferly adv. fairly, courteously, 579.
- ferlyfull adj. marvellous, terrible, 2.
- fet inf. fetch, carry, 443.
- fewall, fewall, fewell sb. fuel, 242, 303, 443.
- fewtir sb. (OF. fautre) rest or socket for a spear, 809.
- feynd sb. fiend, 911.
- fiue adj. five, 34.
- flamand pres. part. blazing, resplendent, 669.
- flan sb. (ON. flan) storm, tempest, 2.
- fleichingis sb. (F. fléchir) flat-teries, cajolery, 899.
- flourdelyce sb. fleur-de-lys, 668.
- flure sb. floor, 681.
- followit pret. pertained, 506.
- foly sb. folly, 524, 553.
- forbot imp. ? forbid, 743.
- forceness, forcynes sb. vigour, might, 811, 817.
- ford adv. forward, forth, 731.
- forestaris sb. foresters, 195.
- forfaltour sb. (OF. forfaicture) forfeiture, 760.
- formest adj. first, principal, 286, 579, 668, 702.
- foroutin weir without doubt, 288.
- forrow (see note) 538.
- forsuith adv. forsooth, truly, 55, 71, 146, 191, 200.
- for thy adv. therefore, 371, 916.
- for-wonderit adj. surprised, amazed, 727.
- forwrocht pp. (Nth. forworht) outwearied, exhausted, 835.
- forzeild pres. (Nth. forgelda) requite, reward, 78.
- forzet inf. forget, 312, 966.
- forzet pp. forgotten, 125, 148.
- foullis sb. fowls, birds, 523, 680.
- foundis pres. (OE. fundian) goes, proceeds, 174.
- foundis pres. attempts, tries, 811.
- foundit pret. went, advanced, 702.
- foundit pret. founded, 968.
- fra prep. (ON. frā) from, 4, 162, 371, 609.
- franc inf. (Nth. fregna) ask, 225.
- freik sb. (OE. freca) man, 616, 655.
- freindly adv. friendly, 279.
- freindschip sb. friendship, 61.
- freschlie adv. cheerfully, gaily, 210.
- freuch adj. (ME. frough, brittle; OHG. frō) frail, weak, 523.
- fre waird (see note) 760.
- fule sb. fool, 507.
- fundin pp. found, 292, 500, 523, 552, 616, 763.
- fure pret. fared, 24, 210; went, came, 8, 18.
- furth adv. and prep. onward, 69; on, along, 397.
- furth fend inf. restrain, keep back, 655.
- furth gane pp. advanced, 262.
- fusloun sb. (L. fusionem) plenty, abundance, 210.
- fute sb. foot, 548, 817; footing, 19.
- fyftene adj. fifteen, 231, 669.

- fyllt pp. defiled, 444.
fyne adj. fine, 54, 680.
fyre sb. fire, 81, 109, 132, 142, 222, 910.
fyrth (OE. frið) woodland, grove, 680.
fyue adj. five, 655.
- ga imp. and inf. go, 116, 157, 423, 750.
gadding sb. assembling, 336.
galf inf. give, 498 (see note).
galf pret. gave, 390; gavest, 369; gave up, 836.
gals pres. go, 219.
gaist sb. guest, 96, 104, 108, 213.
gaist sb. ghost, 836.
gait sb. (ON. gata) road, way, 42, 93, 108, 568, 610, 783.
galzart adj. (OF. gaillart) gallant, gay, 782.
ganandest adj. (ON. gegna) most convenient, readiest, 783.
gane adv. (ON. gegn) hastily, 610.
gane pp. gone, 158, 238, 349.
gang inf. and imp. go, 145, 147, 158, 261, 381, 487.
gangis pres. goest, 610.
gangand pres. part. going, 445.
gar imp. and inf. (Icel. gōra) make, cause, 213, 396, 501, 723.
gart pret. caused, made, 583, 771, 861, 955.
gat (furth) pret. got forth, went out (?) 601.
gat pret. got, 697, 777.
gawin sb. (Dan. gavn) gain, advantage, 381.
- gay sb. gay one, 783.
gedling sb. (OE. gædeling) fellow, 610, 619.
gelf pres. give, 611.
geir sb. array, armour, 482, 770.
gentill adj. noble, 182, 203, 337, 343, 571, 927.
gentrise sb. courtesy, mercy, 368.
gest sb. guest, 201.
gest sb. jest, laughing-stock, 782.
gestning sb. lodging, entertainment, 972.
gif, gyf conj. if, 62, 110, 234, 253, 397.
gif pres. and inf. give, 309, 761, 770.
girth sb. (OE. grið) peace, 836.
glaid adj. glad, 77, 117, 178, 601.
glaid pret. glided, moved, went, 98, 482.
glaidlie adv. (see note) 193.
glaidly adv. gladly, willingly, 617.
gle sb. pleasure, entertainment, 627, 717, 953.
gle sb. (see note) 98.
glemand pres. part. gleaming, shining, 667.
glemis sb. gleams, lights, 456.
glitterand pres. part. glittering, 456, 667, 717, 770.
gouerning sb. living, livelihood, 445.
gowlis sb. gules, red, 455, 667.
graid pp. (contr. of graithit) prepared, ready, 141.
graipls sb. bosses, studs (?) 469.
graith adj. (ON. græiðr) speedy, prompt, 389.

- grant sb. promise, agreement, 76, 389.
- grantit pp. agreed, consented, 317.
- grassum sb. (OE. gærsum) treasure, wealth, 936.
- graut pp. engraved, emblazoned, 455.
- gre sb. degree, 483.
- greif pres. molest, 312.
- gref sb. grief, misfortune, 381.
- greis sb. greaves, leg-armour, 469.
- greit adj. great, 319, 325, 334, 338.
- grene sb. green, 455, 667.
- grome sb. man, gentleman, 611, 729, 782.
- gude adj and sb. good, 72, 88, 97, 261, 291; good fortune, 786; good men, 170.
- gudlie adv. handsomely, 118.
- gyde sb. (ME. gyte) garb, apparel, 717.
- gyf conj. if, 397.
- gyrd (leit) (OE. gyrd?) let drive, struck, 149.
- halkit pret. (OE. higian?) went, proceeded, 642.
- haill adj. whole, complete, 409, 494.
- hailsum adj. pleasant, delightful, 673.
- hair adj. hoar, gray, 419.
- haist sb. haste, 830.
- haistelic, haistely adv. hastily, quickly, 113, 399, 419, 823.
- hald inf. and imp. hold, 19, 251, 315, 371, 380, 409, 780, 798.
- haldin pp. held, bound, 543; kept, preserved, 565.
- haldis pres. holdest, keepest, 493.
- hale adj. whole, entire, 52.
- halcly adv. entirely, 893.
- hame sb. and adv. home, 71, 91, 103, 107, 233.
- hameile adj. homely, plain, 112.
- hapis pres. happens, occurs, 759.
- harberie, harbery sb. lodging, 41, 64, 66, 83, 292, 296, 673, 971.
- harbreit pret. lodged, 707.
- hard adj. strong, bold, 830.
- hard pret. and pp. heard, 15, 99, 280, 437.
- hardy sb. bold one, 642.
- harnes sb. harness, armour, 393, 409, 575.
- harnest adj. armed, 830.
- hart sb. heart, 77, 402, 481, 600, 893.
- hartfully adv. heartily, sincerely, 888.
- haue pres. and inf. have, 105, 162; take, 255, 741.
- he (on) adv. aloud (on high) 211.
- hecht sb. promise, 409, 451.
- hecht pret. and pp. promised, 380, 447, 527, 541, 780, 798.
- heich adj. high, 19.
- heill sb. health, 565, 600.
- heip (see note) 83.
- heir adv. here, 66, 112, 564, 707.
- heir pres. and inf. hear, 330, 375, 762, 847.
- heit sb. heat, 831.
- hende sb. (OE. gehende) amiable one, 967.
- heritably adv. heritably, 761.
- hes pres. hast, has, have, 81, 108, 160, 170, 205, 441, 585.

- het adj. hot, 109.
hew sb. hue, colour, 551.
hewit pp. hewed, smote, 823, 830.
hicht sb. height, 494.
hicht (on, vpon) adv. on high, 37, 684; aloud, 631.
hidder adv. hither, 584, 709.
hie adj. high, 69, 384, 416, 807.
hine adv. (Nth. heona) hence, 49, 854.
hing inf. hang, 741.
holtis sb. (OE. holt) woodlands, woody country, 419, 493.
hone sb. delay, tarrying, 575.
hope pres. fear, apprehend, 720.
hors sb. horse, 58, 393; horses, 814, 818.
houerit pret. hovered, waited, 415.
huifis pres. (MDu. hoven) waitest, watchest, 493.
hult pret. waited, 415.
hundreth adj. hundred, 757.
husband sb. peasant, yeoman, 520, 597.
husband weld sb. peasant's dress, 593.
hy sb. (OE. hīgian) haste, 277, 320, 575, 642, 762, 862, 921.
hyme adv. (Nth. heona) hence, 238.
hynt pret. (OE. hentan) pulled, 575, 696.
hyre sb. hire, earnings, 105.

ilk adj. (Nth. ilca) same, 468; each, every, 137, 200, 329, 351, 404.
ilk anc pron. each one, 25.
- in feir in company, together, 144, 174, 347, 413, 465, 579, 668.
intill prep. in, 409.
into prep. in, 210, 350.
into feir in company, together, 218.
inuy sb. (L. invidia) hostility, spite, 196.
inwart adj. intimate, confidential, 236. iornay, iornaying sb. combat, 483, 588, 796.
ioynit pp. joined, assembled, 695.
ischar sb. (F. huissier) usher, 644.
ithand adj. (ON. iðinn) constant, incessant, 27.
iwis adv. (OE. gewiss) indeed, surely, in truth, 35, 143, 161, 248, 691, 727.

keip sb. heed, care, 638, 755.
keip inf. keep, 162, 538; maintain, 960.
keipeir sb. keeper, 772.
ken inf. and pres. (OE. cunnan) know, 325, 446, 705, 719, 767; tell, direct, 436.
kend pret. knew, 651.
kend pp. taught, directed, 952.
kendill imp. kindle, 107.
kene adj. bold, 842, 860.
kest pret. cast, threw, 365, 839; cast about, reflected, 402; placed, 809.
kest thame addressed themselves, 821.
knaiſis sb. servants, 113.
knap imp. pull, pluck, 111.

- knaw pres. know, 260.
knowledge sb. knowledge, 246, 325.
knawin adj. and pp. acquainted, 254, 532; known, 379, 501.
kne sb. knee, 337.
knellit, kneillit pret. knelt, 333, 337, 421.
knicht sb. knight (passim).
knyfe sb. knife, dagger, 864, 866.
kyith imp. (Nth. cȳða) make known, 107.
kynd sb. nature, 126, 163.
kythand pres. part. showing, appearing, 706.

laid sb. load, 245, 300, 323, 445, 508, 640.
laif pret. laid on, beat, drove, 137.
laid pp. laid down, offered, 297.
laiser sb. leisure, 566.
lait adv. late, 40.
laith adj. loth, 285, 640, 700, 823, 833.
laithly adv. terribly, horribly, 137.
lak inf. (ODan. lak) blame, find fault, 87.
lane inf. (ON. leyna) conceal, 313.
lang adj. long, 828.
lang (thocht) grew weary, 277.
lap on pret. mounted, 277.
lasair sb. leisure, 632.
lat inf. let, 833.
lat imp. let, 212, 377, 617, 623; let me, 291; let us, 525.
lat be imp. leave it alone, 293.
lat the inf. let thee go, 857.
lattin pp. let, 613.
- laubour sb. labour, 509.
lauch inf. laugh, 784.
lauchfull adj. law-abiding, peaceable, 508.
lawtie sb. loyalty, good faith, 509, 602.
layd inf. lay, wager, 374 (see note).
led pp. guided (?) treated (?) 740.
leid pres. lead, 47.
leid inf. lead, carry, 508.
leid sb. (OE. lēod) man, person, 395, 591.
leidand pres. part. bringing, carrying, 595.
leidis pres. carry, 50.
leif inf. live, 951, 967 (?)
leif inf. believe, 941.
leif pres. inf. imp. leave, 65, 423, 640: depart, 613: desist, 785, 823.
leif sb. leave, 279, 318, 556.
leif of inf. leave off, desist, 172.
leifis pres. live, 509.
leill adj. faithful, true, 602.
leip (on) inf. mount, 85.
leird pp. (OE. lēran) taught, 169.
leis pres. lose, 641.
leit pret. let, allowed, 630.
leit gyrd pret. let drive, struck, 149.
lelely adv. honestly, truly, 311, 941.
lely sb. lily, 672.
lemit pret. (OE. lēoma) flamed, brightened, 324.
len inf. grant, give, 331.

- lent pret. (OE. lendan) went, travelled, 591; travelling, 395.
lenth sb. length, distance, 861.
lesing sb. (OE. lēasung) lie, falsehood, 310.
lest inf. last, endure, 784.
let subj. delay, 306.
let sb. delay, 144, 318; hindrance, 540.
letting sb. delaying, 424.
leuand pres. part. living, 785, 919.
leuch pret. laughed, 519, 739.
licht adj. light, bright, 324.
licht adv. lightly, alightly, 635, 740, 936.
liddernes sb. (OE. lyðre) baseness, cowardice, 785.
ling sb. moor, heath, 395.
ling sb. line, straight course, 426.
lofe inf. (Nth. lof) praise, 87.
loft (vpon) adv. aloud, 739, 784.
lois inf. lose, 640.
lorne pp. lost, 433.
loud (on) adv. aloud, 847.
ludgeit pp. lodged, 740.
lufe sb. love, 45, 857.
lufesumly adv. amicably, 557.
luke inf. look, see, 724.
lukit pret. looked, 800.
lyfe sb. life, 168, 376, 433, 857, 950.
lyft sb. (Nth. lyft) sky, 324.
lyis pres. lies, is situated, 246: dwells, 724.
lykand adj. pleased, 40.
lyke adj. likely, 519.
lykis pres. it pleases, pleases, 613, 947.
lykit pret. was pleased, 39.
- lystinit pret. listened, 739.
lytill adj. little, 57, 80, 800.
- ma adj. more (in number) 327, 328, 427, 748.
madlie adv. madly, wildly, 22.
magre sb. (OF. malgre) ill will, hostility, 485.
maid pret. and pp. made, 76, 147, 510, 832.
mair adj. more (in quantity) 61, 149, 162, 415, 511.
maist adj. and adv. most, largest, 68, 171, 236, 391, 802, 885; principal, chief, 227, 230.
maisterfull adj. masterful, overbearing, 442.
malt adj. (OF. mat) exhausted, 832.
mak pres. pret. and inf. make, 128, 172, 200.
makis pres. makest, 95.
manassing sb. threatening, 200.
mantene inf. maintain, 850.
marschellit pp. marshalled, arranged, 184.
mat subj. (OF. mater) trouble, molest, 511.
matchit pp. matched, paired, 184.
meiknes sb. meekness, humility, 653.
meit sb. meat, food, meal, 81, 661, meit inf. meet, 527, 564.
meitis pres. meet, 250; meetest, 395.
mekill, mekle adj. and adv. (OE. mycel) much, great, 6, 47, 61, 138, 338.

- mend inf. help, improve, 653, 954.
- mene inf. (OE. mænan) attempt, 121.
- menstrallis sb. minstrels, 355.
- mer pres. wander, stray, 22.
- merwell sb. marvel, 514.
- mes sb. mass, 573.
- measure sb. moderation, modesty, 653.
- meting sb. meeting, 335, 485.
- mettaill sb. metal, 827.
- nicht pret. might, 19, 83, 653, 811.
- nicht sb. might, 182, 338, 850, 938.
- nichtle adj. mighty, 485.
- nichtis sb. might (mights) 885.
- midmorne sb. mid-morn, 29, 415.
- mirrie adj. pleasant, merry, 135.
- mocht pret. might, could, 268, 490.
- mon pres. (OE. munian) must, 425, 692.
- montane sb. mountain, 22, 35, 37, 793.
- mony adj. many, 3, 6, 12, 444, 446, 945.
- morne sb. morning, 431.
- morne (the) sb. to-morrow, the morrow, 272, 286, 299, 304, 312, 322, 363.
- mot pres. (Nth. mōta) may, 53, 129, 285.
- mure sb. moor, heath, 14, 564, 735.
- mylis sb. miles, 34, 49.
- myrk adj. dark, 22.
- myster sb. (OF. mester) need, 442, 748.
- na adj. and adv. no, 19, 30, 66, 246, 298: nay, 79.
- nait sb. (Nth. nēd) need, 61.
- namit pret. named, 503.
- nane adj. pron. and adv. no, none, 21, 53, 68, 160, 266, 376, 536, 546.
- nane sb. nothing, 172, 191, 261.
- nanis (for the) for the nonce, 469, 688.
- nothing sb. nothing, 506, 561.
- nay (see note) 689.
- neid pres. need, need do, 546.
- neidlingis adv. of necessity, 405.
- neir adj. and adv. near, 66, 91, 177, 346, 412, 799.
- nek sb. neck, 123.
- neuer adv. never, 97, 309, 392, 784, 879.
- new inf. renew, perform, 545.
- newlingis adv. newly, recently, 962.
- nicht sb. night, 38, 83, 135, 328, 342, 961.
- nichtit pret. became night, 40.
- nixt adj. next, 758, 901.
- nobill adj. noble, 54, 703.
- nocht adv. not, 56, 270, 284, 306, 767.
- nocht sb. nought, 491.
- none sb. noon, 282, 342, 400, 546, 577.
- nor conj. than, 504, 546.
- nouthur conj. neither, 81, 412, 431, 450.
- noy sb. hindrance, molestation, 536.

- nurtour sb. nurture, good breeding, 160.
- nyse adj. foolish, 428.
- obeysand adj. obedient, 124.
- ocht pron. aught, any, 253, 302, 371, 554.
- ocht adv. at all, 645.
- of adv. and prep. off, 172; from, out of, 13; of (passim).
- officiaris sb. officers, 254.
- onwart sb. addition, profit, 244.
- ony adj. any, 60, 72, 149, 312, 395, 511.
- or adv. ere, before, 92, 291, 629, 720.
- ordanit pp. and pret. prepared, 323; appointed, 329.
- ouir adv. and prep. over, 8, 14, 79, 383, 807; through, 328.
- outray sb. outrage, 156, 877.
- outrayd pret. outraged, 372.
- outwith prep. without, outside of, 410.
- paintit pp. painted, 664.
- palfray sb. palfrey, horse, 276.
- palice, palys sb. palace, 354, 615.
- pane sb. (L. pannus) apparel, 5, 234, 624.
- pardie int. par Dieu, 166, 530.
- pardoun sb. pardon, 922.
- parische inf. perish, 20.
- pas inf. and imp. go, 71, 341, 568, 623.
- pauyot sb. (see note) 276.
- payit pp. pleased, contented, 70, 580.
- peir sb. equal, 468, 664.
- picht pp. set, studded, 467.
- pithis pl. (OE. piða?) strength, 863.
- plattis sb. back and breast plates, 467.
- plane adj. and adv. clear, plain, 416; plainly, clearly, 315.
- plane sb. plain, 614.
- plesance sb. pleasure, pleasantness, 358, 907.
- plesand adj. pleasing, handsome, 624.
- plicht pres. plight, pledge, 940.
- preichand pres. part. preaching, 345.
- preif inf. prove, try, attempt, 304, 314, 615.
- preifit pp. reckoned, accounted, 497.
- preikit pret. pricked, spurred, 408.
- prels sb. press, crowd, throng, 624.
- prels pres. press, 863.
- preissis pres. presses, 615.
- prelstis sb. priests, 344.
- presoun sb. (see note) 886.
- prest adv. fast, 408.
- prest adj. handsome, 468.
- preule adj. private, 263.
- preuille adv. secretly, 276, 711.
- price sb. praise, honour, reputation, 833.
- principall sb. chief men, nobles, 358.
- profferit pret. offered, 147.
- prufe inf. prove, 863.
- pryme sb. (see note) 23.

- prys inf. value, put a price on, 252.
- pryse imp. praise, 86.
- pulanis sb. (I.L. polena) knee-pieces, 468.
- pund sb. pounds, 757.
- quemely adv. (Nth. cwæme) becomingly, handsomely, 682.
- quha pron. who, 913.
- quhair adv. where, 3, 264, 330, 417, 610, 735.
- quhat pron. what, which, 30, 692.
- quhat kin what kind of, 233, 592.
- quhat sumeuer pron. whatsoever, 398.
- quhen adv. when, 55, 85, 233, 404.
- quhldder conj. whether, 381.
- quhill adv. while, 290, 544; until, 91, 141, 415, 512.
- quhip sb. whip, 385.
- quhome pron. whom, 505.
- quhy adv. why, 95, 597.
- quoke pret. (OE. cwacian) quaked, trembled, 732.
- raid pret. rode, 14, 30, 75, 480, 586.
- raifand pres. part. raving, vociferous, 650.
- raik inf. and pres. (ON. ræika) move, pass, 212, 549.
- rais pret. rose, 215.
- rais inf. hack, hew, 550.
- raith adv. (Nth. hraðe) hastily, quickly, 549, 608, 819.
- rauingis sb. ravings, mad words, 895.
- record sb. recital, report, 729.
- reddy adj. ready, 58, 321, 763.
- reddyit pret. made ready, 779, 808.
- regaird sb. notice, 652.
- reid sb. red, 670.
- rek pres. reckon, regard, 895, 934.
- rekkis pres. regard, 896.
- remeid sb. remedy, redemption, 510.
- remufe inf. remove, give way, 861.
- renk sb. (OF. renc) way, course, 549; lists, 809, 834.
- renkis sb. (OE. rinc) men, warriors, 819.
- rent pp. torn, wounded, 835.
- repreif pres. reprove, rebuke, 843.
- resoun, ressoun sb. reason, right, 84, 119, 214, 252, 259, 378, 884.
- ressonabill adj. reasonable, 758.
- reuall sb. (OF. reule?) (see note) 670.
- reuest pp. clad in their vestments, 344.
- reulit pp. arranged, 466, 671, 686; bordered, striped, 670.
- rew inf. rue, repent, 549.
- rew sb. (F. rue) street, 351.
- reward sb. attention, 650.
- reward sb. reward. donation, 960.
- riches sb. splendour, 351; riches, 934.
- richt sb. right, 758, 844, 967.
- richt adj. and adv. right, 45, 771; straight, 586, 792, 869.
- richt (at) properly, 686.
- rid sb. counsel, advice, 259.
- rid pres. advise, 284, 435, 888.

- rob sb. robe, 576.
rois sb. rose, 671.
ronsy sb. (L. rocinus) horse, 479.
roustle adj. rusty, 518.
rowme sb. space, distance, 809.
rubels sb. rubies, 465.
rude sb. rood, cross, 45, 259, 550, 943.
rude braid sb. rood-breadth, 861.
rufe sb. roof, ceiling, 670.
rufe adj. fierce, strong, 109.
runsy sb. horse, 791, 870.
ruschit pret. hastened, rushed, 791, 819, 862; sprang, 870.
ruse inf. (ON. hrōsa) praise, boast of, 80.
rusit pret. admired, wondered, 481.
ryall adj. and sb. royal, 109, 480, 481, 550; royal one, 14.
ryallie adv. royally, splendidly, 351, 671.
ryaltic sb. royalty, magnificence, 688.
rydand pres. part. riding, 326, 571, 808.
ryde pres. and inf. ride, 291, 479, 779.
rydis pres. rides, 792.
ryfe adj. abundant, 170.

sa adv. so, 8, 137, 298, 417.
sa pret. saw, 801.
sadill sb. saddle, 475.
sadly adv. resolutely, 656.
saif prep. save, except, 590.
saik sb. sake, 110, 243.
sail sb. sale, 243.
sail sb. (F. salle) hall, 713.

sair adj. sore, hard, 637.
saird pret. hurt, 656.
saibe fut. shall be, 56, 308, 433; shalt be, 552.
sall pres. shall, shalt, 85, 122, 159, 301, 305.
salust pret. saluted, 422.
sanct sb. saint, 63, 257, 970.
sapheir sb. sapphire, 464.
sarazine sb. Saracen, 847, 852, 856, 871, 878, 912, 935.
saue inf. save, 500.
sayand pres. part. saying, 77.
sayis pres. says, 46; sayest, 852 schame sb. shame, 87, 488, 898.
schame inf. be ashamed, 301.
schapin pp. shaped, formed, 459.
schelld sb. shield, 459.
schene adj. bright, glorious, 459, 943.
schent pp. confounded, brought to shame, 732.
schill adj. cold, chill, 59.
schir sb. sir (passim).
scho pron. she, 99, 103, 251, 932.
schone sb. shoes, 765.
schord pret. (ON. skara) threatened, bullied, 733.
schort adj. short, 864.
schow sb. shove, push, 698.
schroud pp. (OE. scrūd) clad, adorned, 459.
schynand pres. part. shining, 470, 559.
se pres. and inf. see, 289, 375, 811, 871.
seigis sb. (OE. secg) men, lords, 713.

- selk inf. and imp. seek, 626, 631, 637.
- seimit pret. seemed, 810.
- seir adj. (Icel. sēr) separate, divers, 25, 568, 666, 714, 923.
- seir (in) adv. variously? 678.
- sels pres. seest, 202, 397, 560.
- selcouthly adv. (OE. seld cūð) wonderfully, admirably, 678.
- sembly, semble sb. assembly, 357, 663.
- semblit pret. approached, 590.
- semelle, semely adj. and adv. handsome, 459, 677, 713; handsomely, 666.
- semis pres. seems, 745; seemest, 54, 754.
- semit pret. seemed, 806.
- sen adv. and conj. since, 51, 127, 214, 298, 361, 566.
- send pp. and pret. sent, 251, 948, 967.
- sene pp. seen, 357, 461.
- senȝeorabill adj. lordly, seignorial, 714.
- serue inf. serve, 67, 268, 406.
- seruis pres. serves, 908.
- seruit pp. served, 80, 181, 713; deserved, 742.
- sesit pp. invested, enfeoffed, 923.
- set pres. and pp. account, regard, 635, 936; regarded, 740.
- set pp. beset, 447.
- set pp. arrayed, ornamented, 475, 666, 678.
- seuin adj. seven, 49, 662, 725.
- sextie adj. sixty, 774.
- sib men sb. kinsmen, 898.
- sic adj. and pron. such, 33, 67, 70, 202, 206, 329, 440.
- sicht sb. sight, 344, 590, 662; judgment, 742.
- simpill adj. simple, of low degree, 164, 373, 768.
- sindrie adj. and adv. sundry, various, 221; asunder, 29.
- sine adv. then, afterwards, 920, 958.
- sit inf. resist, disobey, 99.
- skaith sb. (OE. sceaða) harm, injury, 821.
- skill sb. (ON. skil) sense, reason, 57.
- slais pres. slays, 747.
- smylit pret. smiled, 711.
- socht pret. and pp. sought, looked for, 662, 898; took his way, went, 388, 656.
- solempnit adj. solemn, stately, 404, 663.
- sone adv. soon, 142, 273, 281, 332, 571.
- sone sb. son, 356, 943.
- soudanis sb. sultans, 898.
- souerance sb. (OF. assurance) truce, quarter, 880.
- sour adj. bad, evil, 910.
- spair imp. spare, 202.
- spaird pret. spared, 654.
- spak pret. spoke, 270, 279, 378.
- spedely adv. speedily, hastily, 654.
- speid imp. speed, hasten, 426.
- speir pres., imp. and inf. (OE. spyrian) ask, 53, 256, 582.
- speiris pres. askest, 51.
- speiris sb. spears, 815.

- sperpellit (OF. esparpeiller) scattered, 26.
- splenders sb. splinters, 815.
- sprent pret. dashed forward, sprang, 812, 816.
- springis sb. spring (season) 901.
- spuilze inf. despoil, ravage, 901.
- spurris sb. spurs, 812.
- squechonis sb. (OF. escusson) escutcheons, coats-of-arms, 684.
- squyar sb. squire, 772, 774.
- squary sb. attendance or retinue of squires, 273.
- stabill sb. stable, 116.
- stad pp. bested, beset, 136, 603.
- stait sb. estate, dignity, 708.
- stakkerit pret. (ON. stakra) staggered, 151, 860.
- staluartlic adv. stoutly, stalwartly, 32.
- stanis sb. stones, gems, 463, 467.
- start pret. started, 155, 281.
- start sb. brief space, moment, 892.
- steid sb. steed, horse, 32, 477, 812.
- steid sb. place, 674, 860, 964.
- steill sb. steel, 471, 773.
- steill inf. steal, 604.
- steir (on) adv. astir, in motion, 411.
- steird stirred, shaken, 173.
- stiflic, stifly adv. strongly, firmly, 16, 865.
- stonischit pp. astonished, stunned, 173.
- stound sb. (OE. stund) moment, 620.
- stour sb. (OF. estour) combat, 603, 865.
- stout (see note) 477.
- straid pret. strode, 32.
- straik sb. stroke, 173, 818.
- straik pret. struck, 812.
- strait adv. straight, continuously, 731.
- stray sb. (see note) 477.
- strikin pp. stricken, 818.
- strue inf. strive, contend, 554.
- stryke inf. strike, 520.
- stryking sb. striking, fighting, 745.
- stubill adj. sturdy, 520.
- stude pret. stood, 454.
- sture adj. and adv. (OE. stōr) strong, strongly, 16, 818.
- sturely adv. strongly, violently, 860.
- stynt inf. cease, give up, 700.
- succourit pret. succoured, 744.
- succuderus adj. (OF. surquiderie) haughty, arrogant, 909.
- succudously adv. haughtily, 856.
- suddand adj. sudden, 540.
- suddandly adv. suddenly, 736.
- suith sb. (Nth. sōð) truth, 52, 89, 248, 733.
- suld pret. should, 489, 972; shouldst, 163, 370, 559.
- sum adj. some, 56, 59, 61, 887.
- summundis sb. orders, commands, 99.
- suppois pres. suppose, 257.
- suppois conj. although, even if, 767.
- suttelly adv. craftily, artistically, 678.
- swa adv. so, 56.

- swayne sb. fellow, servant, 607.
sweif adj. sweet, 948.
swet pp. sweated, 637.
swoir pret. swore, 949.
swyith, swyith adv. (Nth. swīðe) at once, quickly, 116, 486, 623.
sync adv. then, afterwards, 87, 183, 189, 354, 407.
syre sb. lord, nobleman, 714.

ta imp. and inf. take, 114, 566.
taillis sb. tales, stories, 140, 221, 561.
tak imp. take, 144, 157, 393.
tak me betake me, commit myself, 938.
takin sb. token, symbol, 457.
takis pres. takest, shalt take, 877.
tald pret. told, 220, 403, 708.
tane pp. received, 156; secured, 240.
tane (the) pron. one, the one, 886. tauld pret. told, 528, 728, 906.
teind sb. (ON. tiund) tithe, tenth part, 474.
teir adj. (OE. tōr) tedious, 474.
telland pres. part. telling, 561.
tene sb. (OE. tēona) anger, 123, 457.
tenefull sb. angry one, 458.
tent sb. (OF. entente?) heed, notice, 314.
teuch adj. tough, 521.
tewellis sb. equipments, arms, 474.
tha pron. (OE. þā) those, 749, 802.
thair adv. there, 2, 19, 280, 308, 492, 515, 545, 555.
thairin adv. therein, 28, 651.
thair till adv. thereto, to it, 110, 542.
thairto adv. thereto, 563, 565, 846.
thairun adv. thereon, on that, 374.
than adv. then, 117, 131, 138, 280, 341.
thankand pres. part. thanking, 334.
tharth (me) pres. (Nth. ðorfeð)
 it behoves me, 536.
thay pron. (OE. þā) those, they,
 21, 24, 187, 350.
the pron. thee, 51, 248, 306, 906.
thing sb. person, man, 391, 481.
thir, this pron. (ON. þeir) these, 231, 561, 563, 648, 690, 766, 819.
thocht sb. thought, memory, 255, 319, 364, 389; intention, 912.
thocht conj. though, 164, 236, 522.
thocht lang grew weary or impatient, 277.
thopas sb. topaz, 473.
thourtour way sb. cross-roads, 567.
thow pron. thou, 51 (and passim).
thra sb. haste, 801.
thraly adv. (ON. þraliga) hastily, violently, 657, 701.
thrawin adj. angry, 129.
thre adj. three, 218, 339, 757.
threip inf. and pres. (OE. þrēopian) quarrel, 79, 130, 912; charge, 197.
threift pret. forced, bullied, 542.
threttie adj. thirty, 344, 694.
threttis sb. threats, 657.

- thrive, thriue inf. (ON. þrifa) thrive, 53, 129, 285, 301.
thring inf. and pres. push, 701; strike, 197.
thristit pret. thrust, pushed, 657, 694, 701.
throw adv. and prep. through, 657, 694, 697, 701, 811.
thus gait adv. in this manner, 169.
thyne pron. thine, 56.
ticht pp. fastened, 457; set, 473.
till prep. (ON. til) to, 316, 390.
tit inf. pull, lay hold of, 432.
to-blaisterit pret. blew about, buffeted, 28.
togldder, togiddir adv. together, 251, 820, 823.
to-morne adv. to-morrow, 85, 564.
tother adj. other, 183.
toun sb. town, 349, 410, 521, 928.
to-worne adj. worn out, 560.
towsill inf. tussle, maltreat, 432.
traist imp. (ON. treysta) trust, 55, 308.
traist adj. assured, 547.
traistit pret. trusted, 391.
trauall, traualc, trauell sb. toil, labour, 48, 244, 951.
trauelland pres. part. travelling, 873.
trauellouris sb. travellers, 82.
tre sb. tree, 457.
trew adj. true, 547.
trew lufe sb. (see note) 473.
trimland pres. part. trembling, shaking, 458.
trow pres. and inf. trust, believe, 56, 108, 877, 885.
- trowls pres. believest, 561.
trystit pp. appointed, 794.
tuggill inf. tackle, strive with, 521.
tuik, tuke pret. took, 25, 118, 846.
turnit pret. turned, returned, 4.
twā adj. two, 43, 113, 123, 570.
twyse adv. twice, 148.
tyde sb. time, tide, 4, 48, 287.
tyne inf. (ON. tȳna) lose, 824; perish, 58.
tyt pret. seized, took, 123.
tyte adv. (ON. titt) quickly, 873, 908.
tything sb. (ON. tiðindi) tidings, 582, 961.
- vacant sb. vacancy, vacant office, 758.
vennysoun sb. venison, 208.
veseir sb. visor, 839.
vincussing sb. vanquishing, defeat, 825.
ymbekest pret. surveyed, reconnoitred, 410.
vnburely adj. unhandsome, 522, 696, 807.
vincourtes adj. discourteous, illbred, 122.
vndeid adj. alive (undead) 855.
vnder prep. under, 150.
vnderta pres. undertake, promise, 241.
vndertane pp. undertaken, promised, 364, 572.
vndertuk, vndertuke pret. undertook, promised, 489, 529.
vndo imp. undo, open, 94.

- vneis adv. hardly, scarcely, 155.
vngane pp. not (yet) gone, 661.
vnkend adj. unknown, 247.
vnknawin adj. unacquainted, ignorant, 127.
vnrufe sb. trouble, disquiet, 47.
vnsemand adj. unseemly, unbecoming, 146.
vnset adj. not seated, 146.
vnskilfull adj. ignorant, 159.
vnto prep. unto, 5.
vp adv. up, 155, 281, 839.
vpon prep. upon, on, 186, 272, 288, 564.
vs pron. us, 512, 562.
vther adj. other, 3, 72, 82, 340, 391, 826.

wa adj. loth, 247.
wachis sb. watchmen, guards, 274.
wait pres. (Nth. wat) know, knows, 46, 66, 262, 431, 502.
waitis pres. lie in wait for, watch for, 913.
wald sb. wold, open country, 405.
wald pret. would, wouldst, 70, 92, 226, 303, 499; would go, 690.
walkand pres. part. travelling, wandering, 73, 106.
walkin inf. awaken, 275.
walkinnit pret. awoke, 280.
wan pret. won, 460, 824; shouldst win, 765.
wanderand pres. part. wandering, 328.
wandit pret. wound, bound, 366.
wane sb. (OE. wunian) dwelling, 7, 190, 264, 366, 578, 630.

wantis pres. is wanting, is absent, 288.
wantit pret. lacked, 191, 266.
wantoun adj. (OE. wantogen) rude, rough, 100.
wapnis, wappinnis sb. weapons, 515, 835.
war pret. were, 379, 484, 915.
wardrop sb. wardrobe, 239, 313, 379.
wardroparis sb. grooms of the chamber, 274.
warld sb. world, 892.
warrant inf. warrant, 122, 534, 587.
warysoun sb. protection, 916 (see note).
wassalage sb. knightly deed, 887.
ways sb. ways, roads, 394, 587.
wayndit pret. (OE. wandian) hesitated, 228.
wedder sb. storm, 21, 27, 36, 74, 97, 106, 235; weather, 59, 290.
weld sb. (Nth. wøde) garment, 560, 577, 593.
welld imp. and inf. possess, 925, 965.
welldit pret. possessed, owned, 578.
weill adv. well, 46, 93, 249, 555.
weir sb. war, 460, 766, 824.
weir sb. doubt, 228, 288, 499.
weird sb. destiny, fortune, chance, 377.
welt adj. wet, 106.
wend pret. (Nth. wende) thought, supposed, 649.
wend, went pres. and inf. go, de-

- part, 249, 366, 691; shouldst go, 394.
- wene pres. ween, think, 187.
- weryouris sb. warriors, 766, 789.
- weschin pp. washed, 143, 726.
- wicht adj. (ON. vīgr) strong, violent, 36, 356, 754, 965.
- wickit adj. bad, 21, 36, 106, 233; wicked, 892.
- widdcis sb. withes, ropes, 366.
- will adj. and adv. (ON. villr) astray, lost, 35, 73, 106.
- willar adj. more astray, in worse plight, 138.
- win inf. (OE. winnan) get, attain, go, 110, 625.
- win sb. (OE. wynn) joy, happiness, 925.
- winnis pres. (Nth. wuneð) dwells, 527.
- wirk inf. manage, act, 377, 929.
- wise sb. way, manner, 929.
- wist pret. knew, knew how, 21, 30.
- wit inf. know, 226, 249, 643.
- with all adv. withal, 831, 835; also, 734.
- withoutin prep. without, 44, 144, 318, 392, 424.
- with thy conj. provided that, on condition that, 70.
- wittin pp. known, 604, 649.
- wonder adv. (OE. wundrum) very, extremely, 24, 100, 247.
- worschip sb. honour, dignity, 460, 824, 965.
- worthie, worthy adj. and sb. worthy one, 461, 765, 925; worthy ones, 726; able, 625, 750.
- worthis pres. (Nth. worðes) shall become, 692; can be, 704.
- worthit pret. became, 831.
- wosche pret. washed, 215.
- wox pret. (Nth. wox) grew, became, 36, 100.
- wraith sb. and adj. wrath, 486; angry, wroth, 100.
- wrocht pp. wrought, made, 264.
- wy sb. (OE. wiga) man, 578, 630, 649.
- wyfe sb. wife, 98, 133, 144, 157, 174, 267, 291, 356, 966.
- wyis sb. men, 691.
- wylyt pp. enticed, 709.
- wyn sb. profit, gain, 918.
- wyne sb. wine, 186, 203, 266.
- wynning sb. dwelling, 227, 643.
- wyse adj. wise, crafty, 722, 727.
- wyse sb. way, manner, 433.
- wyselie adv. carefully, 587.
- wythest (wichtest) adj. strongest, 766.
- 3alp adj. active, brisk, 628.
- 3air adv. carefully, 641.
- 3ald pret. yielded, returned, 224.
- 3arne imp. desire, ask, 837.
- 3e pron. ye, you, 89, 116, 158, 179.
- 3e, 3ea adv. yea, yes, 298, 376, 545, 620.
- 3eid pret. (Nth. eode, eade) went, 131, 267, 595.
- 3eilding sb. yielding, submission, 837.
- 3eir sb. year, years, 200, 286, 662.
- 3eiris sb. years, 231.

- ȝeman sb. yeoman, 628.
- ȝeme imp. (Nth. gema) take care of, guard, 641.
- ȝet sb. gate, 609, 612, 628.
- ȝettis sb. gates, 633.
- ȝit adv. yet, as yet, 80, 138, 428, 659, 692.
- ȝone adj. yon, yonder, that, 367, 372.
- ȝone adv. yonder, 704, 706.
- ȝour pron. your, 104, 882.
- ȝow pron. you, 78, 114, 882.
- ȝule sb. Yule, Christmas, 4, 251, 286, 342, 359, 404.
-

~~#82~~

1572 only metrical romance is humorous.

UC SOUTHERN REGIONAL LIBRARY FACILITY

A 000 738 777 2

f'

